a certain issue. The case went up in appeal before a Court which had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The appellate Court, however, entertained the appeal and remanded an issue under this rule to the Court of first instance. On the return of the findings, the appeal was returned for presentation to the proper Court. The appeal then came before the proper Court. It was held that though the order of remand was made by a Court which had no jurisdiction to deal with the case, this was not a fatal objection to the result of the enquiry made in pursuance of the order and that the appellate Court which subsequently dealt with the case could take it into consideration.[4-a] It has also been held in the case cited below that where an additional District Judge has remanded the case to a subordinate Judge, the District Judge has power to transfer the proceedings to another subordinate Judge.[4-b] See also the undermentioned case.[5]

8. Powers and duties of Court to which issues are remitted.—A Court to which issues are remitted under this rule can only try the issues and has no power to decide the suit itself[1] which continues to be pending in the appellate Court.[2] Hence it has no power to refer the case to arbitration.[3] Nor can such Court delegate its function of deciding the remanded issues to any other Court.[4] But where the High Court has remanded issues to the lower appellate Court for findings, the latter can, under O. 41, R. 28, direct the Court of first instance to take further evidence[5] or appoint a commissioner to examine witnesses under S. 75 of the Code.[6]

The Court to which issues are remitted must give its findings on all the issues remitted. It is not open to it to decide only some of the issues, and to

O.41, R.25, Notes 8—10. say that in the view of the law it takes, a finding on the other issues is not necessary.[7] Where it is asked to submit a finding on an issue after recording such evidence as may be produced by the parties, it is bound to give an opportunity to both the parties to produce their evidence.[7-a] Where the Court to which issues are remitted records its findings ex parte without giving any party such an opportunity to produce his evidence, it may restore the case and allow him to produce his evidence.[8]

After a case is remanded under this rule the lower Court cannot add new parties to the suit[9]: but it can bring on record the legal representatives of a deceased appellant.[10]

As to the interpretation of a remand order, see the undermentioned case.[11]

9. Remand, if open for re-consideration by appellate Court after return of findings.—See R. 26, Note 4, infra.

10. New issues raised before the appellate Court.—As a general rule a new point not based on the case pleaded or set up by the parties in the lower Court, cannot be raised for the first time in the appellate Court, and a remand cannot be ordered for the decision of such point.[1] But the bar is not an absolute one and the appellate Court can, in a proper case, remand issues under this rule, even on points not arising on the pleadings as framed.[2] But this can be done only in exceptional circumstances, for good cause shown, and on payment of all costs thrown away.[3]

returned by the lower Court should be filed.[1] But the failure to fix a time is a mere technical irregularity and may be ignored if it does not in any way prejudice the party complaining of the same.[2] Where no time is fixed for filing objections, they may be filed at any time before the hearing.[3] The period for filing objections may be fixed at the time of remitting the issues. It is not necessary that it should be fixed only after the return of the findings.[4]

2. Effect of not filing objections.—Where no objections to the findings are filed within the time fixed the Court may, in its discretion, allow or decline to allow the objections to be taken afterwards.[1] But this does not mean that the appellate Court can treat the findings received from the lower Court as final and binding merely because objections are not filed in time. The appellate Court must examine the findings on their merits, inasmuch as the rule says that after the expiration of the period fixed for filing the objections the appellate Court "shall proceed to determine the appeal".[2] (See O. 41, R. 31.)

Where objections to findings were not taken in the lower appellate Court which remitted the issues, they cannot be raised for the first time as grounds of second appeal.[3]

3. "Shall proceed to determine the appeal".—At the hearing after the remand, the appellate Court is to determine the appeal on the whole of the material on the record, including the evidence and findings returned by the lower Court under the remand order.[1] It is not open to the appellate Court to consider only the findings returned by the lower Court under the remand, and simply confirm the other findings without examining them on the merits.[2] The appellate Court must take into consideration any objections to the findings returned by the lower Court, that may be duly filed.[2] But the absence of any objections is no justification for the appellate Court not examining the findings on their merits. (See Note 2, supra.)

It has been held in cases under the old Code that the Court which passed the order of remand under this rule has no power to transfer the case to any other Court for disposal whether before[4] or after[5] the return of the findings. It is submitted that under the present Code S. 24 is wide enough to enable such transfers to be made.

Where the lower Court makes its return without giving its findings on any of the issues, the appellate Court can remit the issues again for a proper finding being given.[6]

It has been held by the Punjab Chief Court[7] that before the return of findings by the lower Court the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal for default. (See also Note 4, infra.)

4. Unnecessary remission.—Is it open to the appellate Court when the appeal comes on for hearing after the receipt of fresh findings from the lower Court to reconsider the views expressed by it before the remand and to hold that the remand was improper or unnecessary? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. According to the great majority of cases[1] there is no final decision on any matter when an appellate Court remits issues under R. 25 and the entire appeal including matters on which the Court may have expressed its views before the order of remand, is open for consideration at the hearing after the remand. Under this view, it is open to the appellate Court to hold that the order of remand previously made was unnecessary or improper, and to disregard the findings returned by the lower Court. Thus it may dismiss the appeal, after the findings are received, on the ground that the appeal as originally filed was itself incompetent.[2] It has also been held that when a single Judge of the High Court makes an order of remand under R. 25 and the case subsequently comes on for final disposal before a Bench of two Judges, the latter can go back upon the order of remand and the views expressed therein.[3]

O.41, R.26, Notes 4—6.

But it has been held by the Calcutta High Court in the undermentioned case[4] that an order of remand under R. 25 is an interlocutory order which, under the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Hook[5] and Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuar[6] will operate as res judicata and is binding on the Court which passed it, until it is set aside in appropriate proceedings.

An appellate Court is not bound to reconsider the views expressed in the remand order.[7]

Where the appellate Court has heard arguments on some of the issues and expressed its views thereon and remanded other issues under R. 25, it is not bound on the return of the findings, to hear the case de novo but may confine counsel to arguments on the findings returned.[8] It has been held that a party is not entitled to raise new issues for the first time at the hearing after the remand.[9]

5. Second appeal.—The findings of lower appellate Court upon issues remanded by the High Court in second appeal cannot be challenged upon the evidence as in the case of first appeals but objections to such findings must be restricted to the limits within which the original pleas in second appeal are confined.[1]

6. Court-fee.—No Court-fee is chargeable on a memorandum of objections filed under this rule.[1]

Additional evidence in appeal against ex parte decree. See Note 1, Pt. (14).

1. Scope and object of the rule.—The general principle is that the appellate Court should not travel outside the record of the lower Court and cannot take any evidence in appeal. This rule elucidates the provisions of S. 107, Cl. (d) of the Code[1] and is an exception to the general rule stated above in that it enables the appellate Court to take additional evidence in the circumstances mentioned therein.[2] Therefore, the appellate Court is entitled to call for fresh evidence only when the conditions laid down in this rule are

But these decisions cannot be accepted as correct in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Kesowji Issur v. G. I. P. Ry.[7] which lays down clearly that this rule can alone be looked to for taking additional evidence and that the Court has no jurisdiction to admit such evidence in cases where this rule does not apply. This rule does not apply so as to prohibit the appellate Court from doing any of the following things:—

(a) To take into consideration admissions by the parties before the appellate Court.[8]

(b) To issue a commission for local investigation[9] or to examine and adjust accounts.[10]

(c) To refer to books on history, etc., which may have a bearing on the facts of the case.[11] (See Evidence Act, S. 57.)

(d) To send for papers from its own records or from the records of any other Court and inspect the same.[12] (See O. 13, R. 10.)

(e) To examine parties present in Court.[12-a] (O. 10, R. 2.) See also the undermentioned case.[13]

Additional evidence may be admitted even in an appeal against an ex parte decree.[14] The rule is made applicable, so far as may be, to second appeals by O. 42, R. 1.[14-a] But the rule must be applied to second appeals subject to the conditions under which a second appeal is maintainable. Hence, the High Court has no power, in second appeal, to admit additional evidence for the purpose of entering into questions of fact.[14-b] But the High Court may, under its inherent powers, remand a case for retrial with a direction to take additional evidence.[14-c] The rule applies also to appeals in income-tax proceedings[15] but does not apply to proceedings under S. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.[16]

2. When additional evidence may be admitted in appeal.—See Notes 1, 4, 7, 8 and 9.

3. "Has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted".—The appellate Court may admit additional evidence if the evidence in question was tendered in the lower Court but was improperly rejected by it.[1] But where the lower Court had properly rejected the evidence the appellate Court cannot admit the same.[2] Where the lower Court had declined to take certain evidence tendered by a party as being, in its opinion, unnecessary, and passed a decree in his favour and the appellate Court takes a different view of the matter, it should not reverse the decree without giving the decree-holder an opportunity to adduce the evidence which the lower Court had declined to take.[3]

4. "If the appellate Court requires, etc.".—Under Cl. 1 (b) of the rule, it is only when the Court "requires" it (i.e., finds it needful) that additional evidence can be admitted.[1] It may be required (a) to enable the Court to pronounce judgment, or (b) for any other substantial cause, but in either case it must be the Court that requires it, upon its appreciation of the evidence as it stands.[2] The legitimate occasion, therefore, for the exercise of the discretion under this rule, is not, whenever before the appeal is heard a party applies to adduce evidence but when, on examining the evidence as it stands some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent to the Court.[3] It follows that additional evidence cannot be admitted under this rule on a preliminary objection before the hearing of the appeal.[3-a] It is, however, open to the party to point out the defect or to move the Court to supply the defect.[4]

It was held in the undermentioned cases[5] relying upon certain observations of the Privy Council in Indrajit v. Amar Singh[6] that additional evidence could be admitted in appeal for reasons independent of the existence of any lacuna or defect. These decisions are no longer good law since the decision of the Privy Council in Parsotim Thakur v. Lal Mohar Thakur[7] in which the said view has been definitely repudiated.

5. "The appellate Court requires any document to be produced".—Where a Court permits documentary evidence to be produced under this rule it should also permit oral evidence to be adduced in order to prove those documents.[1]

For meaning of the word "requires", see Note 4, above.

6. "Where appellate Court requires any witness to be examined".—The appellate Court should not take additional evidence which impugns the testimony of a witness who was called in the Court below unless that witness is given an opportunity to clear up the mistake. Otherwise, no witness, whatever his standing, would be safe from adverse judicial comment.[1]

7. "To enable it to pronounce judgment."—When the appellate Court finds itself unable to pronounce judgment owing to a lacuna or defect in the evidence as it stands, it may, as has been seen in Note 4 above admit additional evidence.[1] The ability to pronounce a judgment refers not to the ability to pronounce any judgment but to the ability to pronounce a judgment satisfactory to the mind of the Court delivering it.[2] But the appellate Court should not, ordinarily, allow new evidence to be adduced in order to enable a party to raise a new point in appeal.[3] Similarly, where a party on whom the onus of proving a certain point lies fails to discharge the onus, he is not entitled to a fresh opportunity to produce evidence, as the Court can, in such a case, pronounce judgment against him and does not require any additional evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment.[4]

8. "Or for any other substantial cause."—The words "for any other substantial cause" must be read with the word "requires" in the beginning of the sentence. So that, it is only, where, for any other substantial cause, the appellate Court requires additional evidence, that this rule will apply.[1] The words "or for any other substantial cause" need not be construed in the narrow sense suggested by the doctrine ejusdem generis[2] and power to allow additional evidence may be exercised when any point is required to be cleared up in the interest of justice.[3] But at the same time it should be remembered that it is a power to be exercised cautiously and sparingly[4] and only in exceptional cases.[5] Further, the new evidence should have a direct and important bearing on a main issue in the case.[6] Subject to these general rules, additional evidence may be admitted in the following cases:—

(1) When the party wishing to produce the additional evidence was unable, through no fault of his, to produce it in the trial Court.[7]

(2) When evidence has been taken by the lower Court so imperfectly that the appellate Court cannot pass a satisfactory judgment.[8]

(3) When, through the negligence of the guardian of a minor party, an important document was not produced in the lower Court.[9]

But the provisions of this rule are not intended to allow a litigant who has been unsuccessful in the lower Court to patch up the weak parts of his case and fill up the omission in the Court of appeal.[11] It is not the business of the appellate Court to supplement the evidence adduced by one party or the other in the lower Court.[12] Hence, in the absence of satisfactory reasons for the non-production of the evidence in the trial Court additional evidence should not be admitted in appeal[13] as a party guilty of remissness in the lower Court is not entitled to the indulgence of being allowed to give further evidence under this rule.[14] So a party who had ample opportunity to produce certain evidence in the lower Court but failed to do so[15] or elected not to do so[16] cannot have it admitted in appeal.

The inadvertence of the party[17] or his inability to understand the legal issues involved[18] or the wrong advice of a pleader[19] or the negligence of a pleader[20] does not constitute a "substantial cause" within the meaning of this rule. For other cases in which additional evidence was not allowed, see the following cases.[21]

9. Discovery of fresh evidence.—The mere discovery of fresh evidence subsequent to the decision of the lower Court is no ground for its admission in appeal[1] unless the appellate Court requires the evidence to enable inadmissible.[3] A contrary view has, however, been expressed in the undermentioned cases.[4] It is submitted that it is opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in Gunga Gobind Mundal's case[4-a] where it is laid down that the provision as to the record of reasons is not a condition precedent to the reception of the evidence, and cannot, therefore, be accepted as correct.

The reasons need not be recorded in a separate order provided they are embodied in the judgment of the appellate Court.[5] A mere reference to the "peculiar circumstances of the case"[6] or a mere statement that the evidence is necessary to pronounce judgment[7] is not enough compliance with the requirement as to recording of reasons. The issue by the appellate Court of a commission for local investigation, is not the same thing as the admission of additional evidence, and no reasons need be recorded for issuing such commission.[8]

11. Additional evidence by consent of parties.—Where parties consent to the admission of additional evidence they cannot afterwards object to the reception of such evidence.[1] A party in whose favour an order for the admission of additional evidence is made, cannot subsequently attack it.[2] Similarly, a party who has taken advantage of the order for the admission of additional evidence and lets in such evidence, cannot himself subsequently question the order.[3]

12. Procedure to be adopted under this rule.—The formalities as regards the admission and recording of evidence in the original Court apply to additional evidence taken in the appellate Court.[1] The appellate Court is not authorised merely to send a document to the thumb impression bureau and act upon their report.[2] The issue of a general commission to try an issue is not warranted by this rule. If additional evidence is required, it should be taken by the appellate Court itself or the appellate Court should direct it to be taken by the lower Court.[3]

There is nothing illegal in an appellate Court first ordering additional evidence, and then cancelling the order and remanding the case for re-trial, for, there is no decision of finality in the exercise of the discretionary power conferred by the rule.[4]

13. Application to put in evidence.—The rule does not require an application for the admission of additional evidence. But such an application is not prohibited; for, although the test of admissibility of additional evidence under this rule is the requirement of the appellate Court on an appreciation of the evidence as it stands, it is open to a party to point out to the Court any defects in the evidence on the record. (See Note 4.) In fact, the existence or otherwise of such an application seems to have been regarded as an indication of whether the Court "required" the additional evidence.[1]

14. Opportunity to opposite party to contest admissibility of, or rebut the fresh evidence.—When additional evidence is sought to be admitted in appeal, the opposite party should be given an opportunity to contest the admissibility of the evidence[1] and to adduce rebutting evidence.[2] But failure to give such opportunity does not vitiate the proceedings if it has not caused any prejudice to the opposite party.[3]

15. Remand for trial de novo.—The rule contemplates a disposal of the case on the merits by the appellate Court itself.[1] Where the appellate Court desires to take further evidence the proper course is to follow the procedure laid down in Rr. 27 and 28 and not to remand the whole case.[2] But in exceptional cases the appellate Court has an inherent power to remand the case for taking additional evidence.[3]

16. Court, if can take notice of subsequent events.—As a general rule, a Court of appeal in considering the correctness of the judgment of the Court below will confine itself to the state of the case at the time such judgment was rendered and will not take notice of any facts which may have arisen subsequently, but in exceptional cases, the Court will depart from this rule specially where by so doing it can shorten litigation and best attain the ends of justice.[1] See also Note 4 to O. 7, R. 7, ante and Note 4 to R. 33, infra.

17. Party on whom onus is shifted by appellate Court if entitled to let in additional evidence.—Such a party is not entitled to let in additional evidence if he is not taken by surprise by the action of the appellate Court.[1]

18. Second appeal.—An order of an appellate Court admitting or rejecting additional evidence is neither a decree nor an appealable order, and hence, no appeal lies therefrom.[1] But the order can be questioned in the appeal from the appellate decree (S. 105). As regards the grounds on which such an order can be attacked, the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the lower appellate Court[2] in admitting[3] or refusing to admit[4] additional evidence. But an objection can be raised on the ground that the lower appellate Court has admitted additional evidence in contravention of this rule[5] or has refused to exercise the discretion vested in it by that rule.[6] (Such objection being covered by S. 100.)

Additional evidence admitted in contravention of this rule should be disregarded as inadmissible.[7] But the decree should not be reversed or varied on that ground unless the decision, on the merits, has been affected thereby.[8] (See C.P.C., S. 99 and Evidence Act, S. 167.)

Where the lower appellate Court has admitted additional evidence, the second appeal cannot, on that account, be treated as a first appeal so as to enable questions of fact to be gone into.[9]

19. Privy Council.—There is no restriction on the powers of the Privy Council to admit additional evidence in appeals before it.[1] The rejection of an application for the admission of additional evidence does not involve any substantial question of Law within S. 110 so as to give a right of appeal to the Privy Council.[2]

20. Revision.—Where an appellate Court admits additional evidence which it is not competent to receive in accordance with the provisions of the Code, the defect in its order amounts only to an error of law, and not a want of jurisdiction and hence, no revision lies from such an order.[1]

O.41, R.28, Note 1.

Mode of taking additional evidence.

R. 28. [S. 569.] Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced, the Appellate Court may either take such evidence, or direct the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, or any other subordinate Court, to take such evidence and to send it when taken to the Appellate Court.

1. Mode of taking additional evidence.—This rule permits the appellate Court to either take the additional evidence itself or direct the lower Court to take it.[1] The lower Court taking evidence under this rule acts in a ministerial capacity. The parties may object to the admissibility of the evidence before the appellate Court, though they may not have taken any such objection before the lower Court.[2]

Where pending proceedings for taking additional evidence before the lower Court (directed by the appellate Court) one of the parties to the appeal dies, the application for substitution of legal representatives can be entertained only by the appellate Court and not by the lower Court.[3] The appellate Court may under this rule send the case back to the first Court to have a local enquiry made.[4] (Cf. O. 41, R. 27, Note 1.).

O.41, R 29, Note 1.

Points to be defined and recorded.

R. 29. [S. 570.] Where additional evidence is directed or allowed to be taken, the Appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined, and record on its proceedings the points so specified.

1. Points to be defined and recorded.—When additional evidence is allowed to be given this rule requires that the appellate Court should specify and record on the proceedings the points to which the evidence should be confined.[1]

JUDGMENT IN APPEAL.

Judgment when and where pronounced.

R. 30. [S. 571.] The Appellate Court, after hearing the parties or their pleaders and referring to any part of the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, to which reference may be considered necessary, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders.

Synopsis.

1. "After hearing the parties or their pleaders."
2. "In open Court, etc."

Death of party pending appeal. See Note 1, Pts. (1) and (2).

1. "After hearing the parties of their pleaders."—Compare O. 20, R. 1, ante.

The rule authorises a judgment to be pronounced only after hearing the parties or their pleaders.[1] A judgment pronounced without hearing them is unauthorised by the Code. Hence, where, before the hearing of an appeal, a party to the appeal dies and it is heard and disposed of without his legal representatives being brought on the record, the decree is a nullity whether it is adverse to the deceased[1-a] or is in his favour.[2]

Where a party dies after the hearing but before the judgment is pronounced it is not vitiated by the absence of his legal representatives on the record. (See O. 22, R. 6.)

2. "In open Court, etc."—Where the provisions of this rule as to the judgment being pronounced in open Court and after notice to the parties were not complied with, it was held that an appeal filed within 90 days of the appellant coming to know of the decision against him was within time and that in any case there was "sufficient cause" for the delay within the meaning of S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[1] The judgment may be given at once after the hearing is over or on some future day.[2] (See also Notes on O. 20, R. 1.)

Local Amendment.

MADRAS.

The following is substituted for O. 41, R. 31:—

31. Consideration of evidence. See Notes 7 and 3, Pt. (3).

Consideration of grounds of appeal. See Note 5, Pt. (4).

1. Object and applicability of rule.—The objects of requiring an appellate Court to record in its judgment the particulars mentioned in this rule are twofold, namely: (a) to afford the parties an opportunity of knowing and understanding the grounds of the decision with a view to enable them to exercise, if they see fit and are so advised, the right of second appeal conferred by S. 100[1] and (b) to enable the High Court in second appeal to Judge whether the lower appellate Court has properly appreciated the case and has decided it after applying its mind to it and considering the evidence.[2] See also Note 3 to O. 20, R. 3.

The provisions of this rule as also R. 30, supra apply also to proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act, III of 1926, but a judgment of the Board need not be dated, signed or pronounced in open Court. See List II. Sch. 2 of that Act.

2. Contents of judgment of appellate Court—General.—A judgment of the first appellate Court must be complete and self-contained[1] and must state the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision.[2] Compare O. 20, R. 3.

3. Judgment of affirmance.—The rule makes no distinction between affirming judgments and reversing judgments, and in either case it is obligatory upon the appellate Court to comply with the requirements of the rule. Hence, where an appellate Court affirms the decision of the trial Court, a mere general expression of concurrence with the trial Court's judgment without giving any reasons, is not a sufficient judgment under the law.[1] But an affirming judg-come into close quarters with the judgment appealed from,[4] and must express an opinion on all the points on which the lower Court has based its conclusions.[5] It has, however, been held in the cases cited below[6] that it is not necessary for an appellate Court when reversing the decision of the trial Court, to meet the reasons given by such Court, and that it is enough if the appellate Court gives its own reasons for its own decision.

5. Points for determination.—This rule requires the appellate Court to state in its judgment the points that arise for determination.[1] These points must cover all the important questions involved in the case[2] and must not be general and vague.[3] The object of the legislature in making it incumbent on an appellate Court to raise points for determination, is to clear up the pleadings, and focus the attention of the Court and of the parties, on the specific and rival contentions of the parties.[3-a] But an appellate Court is not bound to decide a point which although taken in the grounds of appeal, has been abandoned[4] or is not urged at the hearing of the appeal.[5] Similarly, a new

Under this rule, the appellate Court must state in its judgment the reasons for its decision.[1] It must set forth the evidence relied upon[2] and must come to its own independent conclusion on a consideration of such evidence. It must not proceed on the assumption that it is, in any way, bound by the views of the trial Court, though it must not forget that the trial Court has had the opportunity of watching the demeanour of the witnesses in Court.[3] A mere statement that a point is proved or not proved,[4] or that counsel admits that certain evidence is the best evidence,[5] or that the arguments of plaintiff's counsel represent the correct view of the case,[6] or that a point is absurd, or ridiculous, or worthless,[7] is not a proper judgment. be based on mere conjectures and presumptions[8] or on evidence not legally admitted.[9]

But the whole evidence on the record need not be reviewed. It is enough if the evidence discussed is reasonably adequate for a proper decision of the case.[10] Nor is it necessary to discuss a document not brought to the notice of the appellate Court.[11]

In the undermentioned case[12] it was remarked by Markby, J., that reasons in S. 359 of the Code of 1859 (now O. 41, R. 31) meant not the reasons for any conclusion of fact, but reasons showing the points of fact or of law upon which the decision runs. Having regard to the foregoing discussion this view seems to be wrong.

Where a judgment does not discuss a document of obvious importance, it may be presumed that the Court has not considered it.[13]

8. "Where the decree appealed from is reversed, etc.", Cl. (d).—Where an appellate Court reverses or modifies the decree appealed from, it must specify in its judgment the relief to which the appellant is entitled: it is not enough merely to say, that the appeal is decreed, or that the decree is reversed.[1] Where the conclusions in the appellate judgment differ in important points from those of the trial Court, the appellate Court must specify in its decree the modifications necessitated by its conclusions.[2]

9. Summary dismissal of appeal under O. 41, R. 11.—There is a conflict of decisions as to the applicability of this rule to cases of summary dismissal of an appeal under R. 11, ante. On the one hand it has been held by High Courts of Calcutta,[1] Madras,[2] Allahabad,[3] Rangoon,[4] the Chief Court of Punjab[5] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh,[5-a] that the rule applies to such cases and the appellate Court is not exempt from writing a judgment in the manner prescribed by R. 31. In the special circumstances of any case, however, a short judgment merely expressing concurrence with the views of the lower Court without entering into reasons may be held sufficient.[6] On the other hand, it has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[7] and Sind[8] that the rule does not apply and that the appellate Court is not bound to write a formal judgment in such cases. The Bombay High Court inclines to the latter view[9] but holds that under Civil Circular No. 51 of 1890 of that Court issued under the Indian High Courts Act, appellate Courts are bound to comply with the requirements of R. 31 even in cases falling under R. 11.[10]

10. Non-compliance with Rule—Effect—General.—This rule is imperative and a judgment which is not in accordance with it, is not one according to law.[1] But a substantial compliance with the rule is enough. What is substantial compliance depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.[2] The important point is that it must be evident from the judgment of the appellate Court that it has properly appreciated the case, has applied its mind to it and has decided it after considering the evidence on the record.[3] If the judgment satisfies this requirement, the appellate Court will be deemed to have substantially complied with the rule, and its judgment will not be interfered with merely because it does not strictly fulfil the formalities laid down therein.[4]

11. Second appeal—Maintainability of, on ground of non-compliance.—A second appeal will lie on the ground that the judgment of the lower appellate Court does not substantially comply with this rule, and is therefore not a judgment according to law.[1] A contrary view has, however, been taken in some cases, on the ground, that the non-compliance with this rule cannot be considered to be an irregularity which may possibly have affected the decision on the merits within S. 100, Cl. (c).[2] This view is against the general trend of opinion. Further, at least some of the cases[3] laying down the view are cases in which the non-compliance with the rule was not of a substantial nature.

Findings of fact of the lower appellate Court for which reasons are not given are not conclusive in second appeal.[4]

12. Non-compliance with the rule by lower appellate Court—Procedure of High Court.—Where the lower appellate Court has not substantially complied with this rule, the High Court may reverse the decree and remand the case for disposal according to law.[1] It has however been held in the cases cited below[2] that the High Court cannot do so but can only require the Judge in the lower Court, if he is still in service and in the same district, to state his reasons for his conclusions. This view is against the general trend of opinion. Further, some of the cases[3] expressing such a view will, on examination, be found to be not cases of substantial non-compliance with the rule.

The High Court may, instead of remanding the whole case call for fresh findings from the lower appellate Court.[4]

13. Appeal in proceedings under S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.—The judgment in an appeal in proceedings under S. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, must, according to the general rule, give reasons for the decision.[1]

14. Applicability of rule to High Court.—In the undermentioned case[1] the High Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court but failed to give in its judgment any reasons for its decision. An application was made to the High Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the requirements of the present rule were not complied with. On this application, Edge, C. J., said that the present rule was not intended to apply to cases where the High Court, after hearing the judgment of the lower Court and the arguments thereon comes to the conclusion that both the judgment and reasons given by the lower Court for its decision are complete and satisfactory. The learned Chief Justice gives no reason for his view, and it is not clear why the present rule or at least the principle thereof should not apply to the High Court.[2] On the other hand, the Privy Council itself has held that the High Court must give reasons for its decision in its judgments.[3] See also Cl. 42, Letters Patent. But under O. 49, R. 2, where at the commencement of the present Code there were, in force, any rules for the recording of judgments by Chartered High Courts, the present rule cannot, in any way, affect the operation of such rules.[4]

15. Privy Council appeal.—Where the trial Court by its decree decides two points against a party and he appeals to the High Court only on one of them, and the High Court dismisses his appeal, he cannot in his appeal to the Privy Council attack the decree of the High Court on the ground of its having wrongly accepted the decision of the trial Court on the other point.[1] See also Note 14, above.

[S. 577.] The judgment may be for confirming, varying or reversing the decree from which the appeal is preferred, or, if the parties to the appeal agree as to the form which the decree in appeal shall take, or as to the order to be made in appeal, the Appellate Court may pass a decree or make an order accordingly.

Synopsis.

1. Confirming, varying or reversing decree. 2. Compromise decree in appeal.

1. Confirming, varying or reversing decree.—Under this rule, an appellate Court has no power to "dismiss" an appeal. The judgment must be one for confirming, varying or reversing the decree appealed from. But an appeal may be "dismissed" under R. 11, ante or as being incompetent, as where it is time-barred or is barred under S. 102.[1]

2. Compromise decree in appeal.—Where an agreement set up by one party is denied by the other, there was a conflict of decisions under the old Code, as to whether the Court had the power to determine the question as to the factum and validity of the alleged agreement and pass a decree if it finds such agreement to have been validly made. 1. Scope, object and applicability of rule.—This rule is new and is based on O. 58, R. 4 of the rules of the Supreme Court in England. It is wider than O. 41, R. 4. Its object is to enable the Appellate Court to do complete justice between the parties[1] and to avoid contradictory and inconsistent decisions on the same questions in the same suit.[2] For this purpose, a discretionary[3] power is conferred on the appellate Court to pass such decree or order as ought to have been passed or as the nature of the case may require notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree or that the party in whose favour the power is proposed to be exercised has not filed any appeal or cross-objection. The discretion conferred is wide[4] and, in a proper case, the appellate Court should not hesitate to exercise it.[4-a] But as the power is in derogation of the general principle that a party cannot avoid a decree against him without filing any appeal or cross-objection, it must be exercised with care and caution.[5] No hard and fast rule, can however be laid down as to the circumstances under which the power may or may not be exercised and each case must depend on its own facts.[6] (See also Note 6.)

There is no restriction as to the class of suits to which the rule applies[7]. The principle of the rule applies also to applications for revision.[8] It also applies to a suit to set aside a decree. Thus, where a decree is passed against several defendants, some of whom sue to have the decree set aside, the decree may be set aside as against all.[9] See also the following cases.[10]

2. "Any decree or order which ought to have been passed".—The rule enables the appellate Court to pass any decree or order which ought to have been passed.

Illustrations.

1. Three out of four trustees bring a suit for rent against the lessee, of the trust properties, adding the other trustee as the second defendant in the suit. The trial Court passes a decree for three-fourths of the rent in favour of the plaintiffs, and for one-fourth, in favour of the second defendant. The first defendant appeals. The appellate Court considers that the appeal must be dismissed, but that the trial Court should not have passed a decree for one-fourth in favour of the second defendant as he was a defendant and not a plaintiff. The appellate Court, therefore, in dismissing the appeal passes a decree for the entire sum in favour of the plaintiffs declaring at the same time, that, as to one-fourth, it is for the second defendant's share. Held that the appellate Court has power to do so.[1]
2. Plaintiffs sue for a declaration that the proceedings taken against them by the defendants are ultra vires and null and void. The trial Court passes an order of mandamus against them instead of giving a declaratory decree. The defendants appeal. The appellate Court considers that an order of mandamus should not have been passed but that a decree for a declaration should have been passed. It has power to pass such a decree.[2] For other instances, see the undermentioned cases.[3]

3. "Such further or other decree or order as the nature of the case may require".—The appellate Court has power to pass not only any decree or order which ought to have been passed but also such further or other decree or order as the nature of the case may require. Accordingly the appellate Court has power to deal with the case in any way that may seem equitable to all the parties concerned.[1]

Illustrations.

1. A property, the subject of two mortgages, one in favour of S and the other in favour of B, is sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by T. S sues for the enforcement of his mortgage against the surplus sale-proceeds and makes B, a defendant to the suit claiming priority over him. The suit is decreed. B appeals against the decree. In the meanwhile there is a suit by B for setting aside the revenue sale and this suit is also decreed. T, (the purchaser at the revenue sale), appeals against this decree. Both appeals are heard together and are dismissed. The appellate Court can, in dismissing the appeals, direct that S's rights should be enforced against the property instead of against the sale-proceeds.[2]
2. A suit is erroneously dismissed on the merits, instead of for default. An appeal is filed by the plaintiff. The appellate Court can, not only pass the order which the lower Court ought to have passed, viz., an order of dismissal for default, but also a further order that the suit do stand restored and that the lower Court do proceed to try the suit according to law.[3]
3. Where on an application to set aside an execution sale on the ground of the price being less than that payable under certain rules, the lower Court refuses to set aside the sale, and, on appeal, the appellate Court considers that the sale should be set aside, it has power to accept the purchaser's offer of a higher price, and to leave the sale undisturbed.[4] See also the undermentioned cases.[5]

4. Power of appellate Court to take cognisance of subsequent events.—See also Note 4 to O. 7, R. 7 and Note 16 to O. 41, A. 27 for a full discussion. As a general rule, a Court of appeal, in considering the correctness of the judgment of the Court below, will confine itself to the state of the case at the time such judgment was rendered, and will not take notice of any facts which may have arisen subsequently.[1] But the Court will, in exceptional cases, depart from this rule, especially where, by so doing, it can shorten litigation and best attain the ends of justice. In such cases it is not only competent to a Court of appeal, but it may be its duty to take notice of events which have happened subsequently to the passing of the decree or order appealed against.[2]

5. Power may be exercised notwithstanding that appeal is as to part only of the decree.—This rule expressly empowers the appellate Court on an appeal from one part of the decree, to reverse or modify the other part.[1]

But where there are several suits and a separate decree is passed in each of them, the appellate Court has no jurisdiction in an appeal against one of them to set aside the other decrees.[2]

O.4 , R.33, Note 6.

6. Power may be exercised in favour of respondents or parties who have not filed appeal or cross-objections —The general principle is that a decree is binding on the parties to it, until it is set aside in appropriate proceedings.[1] A party who wishes to have a decree against him modified or reversed, must comply with certain requirements as to filing of appeals, objections and so forth.[2] Hence as an ordinary rule, an appellate Court must not reverse or vary a decree in favour of a party who has not preferred any appeal or cross-objection against it, and this general rule holds good notwithstanding the enactment of R. 33.[3] But in exceptional cases, the rule enables an appellate Court to pass such decree as ought to have been passed, or as the nature of the case may require, even if such decree would be in favour of parties who have not filed any appeal or cross-objections against the lower Court's decree.[4] Ordinarily the power conferred by this rule will be confined to those cases where, as a result of interference in favour of the appellant, further interference with the decree of the lower Court is rendered necessary, in order to adjust the rights of the parties according to justice, equity and good conscience.[4-a]

The appellate Court comes to the conclusion that C and not B is liable to A. It has jurisdiction while allowing B's appeal, to pass a decree in favour of A against C.[5]

(b) A sues B and C for a certain sum of money. The suit is decreed against B and dismissed against C. B appeals making A and C respondents to the appeal. A neither appeals nor files cross-objection against the decree dismissing his suit against C. The appellate Court considers that C and not B is liable. It can, while reversing the decree against B pass a decree against C.[6]

(c) A suit is brought on behalf of the public for a declaration (a) that the public are entitled to use the locks on a certain river without paying tolls to the defendant, and (b) that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair. The trial Court holds that the plaintiff is entitled to use the locks without paying tolls but the defendant is under no obligation to keep the locks in repair and a decree is accordingly passed. The defendant appeals but the plaintiff neither appeals nor files cross-objections against the decree. The appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not entitled to use the locks without paying the tolls, but that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair. The appellate Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree declaring that the public are liable to pay tolls and also declaring that the defendant is under an obligation to keep the locks in repair.[7]

(d) A is the vendee of certain lands from B. B fails to deliver possession of the lands to A. A sues B for possession, or in the alternative for the return of the purchase-money. The trial Court awards A, a decree for possession. B appeals. The appellate Court considers that A is not entitled to sue for possession, but is entitled to the return of the purchase-money. The appellate Court can vary the decree accordingly.[8]

(e) A, an auction-purchaser sues B, the judgment-debtor for possession or in alternative C, the decree-holder for refund of the purchase-money. The trial Court decrees possession. B appeals making A and C respondents. The appellate Court comes to the conclusion that A is not entitled to recover possession from B but is entitled to the refund of the purchase-money from C. A decree may be passed to this effect.[9]

(f) A and B sue C for recovery of certain property. The trial Court passes a decree in A's favour but dismisses B's suit. C appeals. B neither appeals nor prefers cross-objection. The appellate Court holds that B and not A is the person entitled. It can pass a decree in B's favour.[10] See also Note 8.

The cases given in the above illustrations were cases in which there was interference by the appellate Court in appellant's favour. Suppose there is no interference in appellant's favour in a certain case, can the appellate Court reverse or modify the decree in favour of parties who have not filed any appeal or cross-objection. For instances A sues B for Rs. 1,000. A decree is passed in A's favour for Rs. 400 only. A appeals from the decree. B files neither an appeal nor prefers cross-objections against the decree. The appellate Court finds that A is not entitled to any amount. Can it dismiss his suit in toto or can it merely dismiss his appeal leaving untouched the decree for Rs. 400 in his favour? Similarly in the above case, B (the defendant) appeals and A (the plaintiff) neither appeals nor files any cross-objection. The appellate Court finds that B is liable for the whole amount claimed by the plaintiff and not merely for the portion of it decreed against him. Has it the power, under such circumstances to pass a decree against B for the whole amount or can it merely dismiss his appeal leaving untouched the decree which exempts him from the liability for the balance of the amount? On this question there is a divergence of opinion. The decisions fall into three classes:—

(a) Those which hold that the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to pass a decree in B's favour in such a case.[11]

(b) Those which do not advert to the question of jurisdiction but simply say that the appellate Court should not pass a decree

O.41, R.33. Note 6.

It is submitted that the view expressed in (c) above is correct for the following reasons:—

(1) This rule is general in its terms and contains no words which would warrant its being restricted to cases where the appellate Court interferes in appellant's favour.[14]

(2) The following cases[15] out of the cases cited under (a) were decided under the previous Code which did not contain any provision corresponding to R. 33.

(3) The cases cited under (b) do not say that the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to pass a decree in B's favour in such circumstances.

In exercising the power under this rule, the Court should not lose sight of the other provisions of law such as the Court-Fees Act or the Limitation Act which are likely to be infringed by the exercise of such power.[16] Care and judicial discretion must, therefore, be exercised in view of all the circumstances of the case.[17] The following conditions should be satisfied before such power is exercised in favour of a party:—

(a) The Court must be satisfied that there are good reasons for such party not having filed any appeal or cross-objection.[18]

(b) Interference in favour of such party must be rendered necessary by the conclusions to which the appellate Court comes in deciding the appeal.[19]

Illustration.

A decree is passed in an administration suit dividing the estate between A and B, and rejecting the claim of C to be entitled to the whole estate in preference to both A and B. A appeals from the decree claiming a higher share. C does not file any appeal or cross-objection. The appellate Court has no power in such appeal to enter into the question of C's preferential rights.[20]

(c) Interference must be necessary in the interests of justice, equity and good conscience.[21]

In Rukia v. Mewa Lal[22] the High Court of Allahabad observed that the rule "is restricted to cases where without disturbing the grounds upon which the judgment of the trial Court proceeds, the appellate Court considers that the decree should be modified in order to do justice to all the parties concerned including such as have not set the law in motion." If these remarks were intended to lay down that under this rule an appellate Court has no power to vary a decree in favour of a respondent who has not filed an appeal or cross-objection if it has upset the grounds upon which the lower Court's judgment is based, it is submitted that the view is incorrect.

The appellate Court can interfere in favour of a party or a respondent, who has filed an appeal or cross-objection and failed therein.[23]

7. Power if can be exercised in favour of persons not parties to appeal.—The appellate Court can exercise its power under this rule in favour of parties to the suit who were not impleaded as parties to the appeal.[1] A contrary view has, however, been taken in the undermentioned cases.[2] It is submitted that this view is not correct as it is inconsistent with the express provisions of the rule which uses the words "respondents or parties".[3] See also Notes to R. 4, ante.

8. Decree against several persons—Appeal by one—Power of appellate Court to set aside decree against all.—Where a decree is passed against several persons and one of them appeals against it, it is competent to the appellate Court under this rule to set aside the decree against all of them[1] although such decree does not proceed on any ground common to all the persons against whom it is passed.[2] But this power of the appellate Court cannot be exercised as a matter of course and in the absence of special reasons.[3] Moreover, where there are several defendants and the decree imposes a separate liability on each of them, and one of them appeals against that part of the decree which concerns him, it has been held that the appellate Court cannot set aside the decree against all the defendants, the reason given being that in such a case there is really a combination of several decrees one of which alone is the subject-matter of the appeal.[4] See also Note 5, ante. A contrary view, however, has been taken in the following cases.[5]

Where a decree is passed against two defendants, against one of whom it is passed on confession of judgment, and against the other, after contest, and the latter appeals against the decree, the appellate Court cannot set aside the decree in favour of the former.[6]

9. Power if can be exercised against person not party to appeal.—Under this rule, the appellate Court has no power to interfere to the prejudice of a person who was a party to the suit but who was not impleaded in the conclusion that it is time barred.[1] But it has been held that if the appellate Court is not in a position to reject the whole claim, as for instance, where the defendant has confessed judgment as to a part of the claim, the appellate Court should not dismiss even that part of the claim which is the subject-matter of appeal.[2] The reason given is that the obligation to dismiss a suit as time barred under S. 3 of the Limitation Act arises only when the appellate Court is in a position to dismiss the whole claim.[3]

When a suit is decreed partially and the plaintiff appeals against the disallowance of the balance of his claim, the entire decree is imperilled because the appellate Court can in such appeal dismiss the whole suit and hence limitation for execution of the decree runs from the date of the appellate decree.[4] When a decree imposes a separate liability on each of the several defendants, and one of them appeals against that portion of the decree which affects him, is limitation postponed under Art. 182, Cl. (2), even for the execution of the decrees against the other defendant. On this question there is a conflict of decisions, some cases holding that time runs from the appellate decree[5] and others holding that time runs from the lower Court's decree.[6]

14. Res judicata.—A sues B and C in the alternative for a certain sum of money. The suit is decreed against B and dismissed against C. B appeals making A and C respondents. The appellate Court sets aside the decree against B. It can at the same time pass a decree against C. But its failure to do so does not operate as res judicata under S. 11, Explanation 5, because it was not obligatory but only discretionary on the part of the appellate Court to grant relief to A.[1] (See S. 11, Note 25.) Similarly, the failure of A to ask for relief being granted to him under R. 33 does not operate as res judicata under S. 11, Explanation 4.[2]

Where a defendant appeals as to a part of the decree against him it has been held by the Madras High Court in the undermentioned case[3] that he is precluded by res judicata from urging in support of his appeal a point which goes to the root of the whole decree including the portion of it from which he has not appealed. It is submitted that this decision is inconsistent with the Full Bench decision of the same High Court in Panchanada v. Vythinatha[4] and other cases cited in S. 11, Note 29, Foot-note 10. Further the decision seems to overlook the provisions of the present rule which enable the appellate Court to

He is not entitled to file a second appeal against C because to allow him to do so would be to allow him to prefer an appeal directly to the High Court from the decision of the trial Court.[1] The decisions to the contrary[2] are not good law in view of the Privy Council case mentioned below.[3]

A sues for Rs. 1,000. The trial Court passes a decree for Rs. 600. The defendant appeals but A does not file any appeal or cross-objection. The defendant's appeal is allowed and A's suit is dismissed in its entirety. A files a second appeal. He cannot contend in the second appeal that his whole suit should be decreed. The utmost he can claim is the restoration of the trial Court's decree.[4] The authorities to the contrary[5] are not good law as they are opposed to the Privy Council decision in Nobinchandra v. Chandra Madhab.[6] But where the omission to grant a relief is due to a mere slip of the pen, it can be decreed on further appeal, though no appeal was preferred against the decree of the first Court.[7]

The mere fact that a decree might have been passed in favour of a party to the suit who was not impleaded as a party to the appeal does not make him constructively a party to the appeal so as to enable him to file a second appeal against the decree in the appeal.[8] No second appeal lies against an order of remand passed not under R. 23, ante but under the present rule.[9]

The refusal to take action under R. 33 in the exercise of its discretion by a lower appellate Court is not an error of law within S. 100 so as to sustain a second appeal.[10]

17. Privy Council Appeal.—A sues B and C. The claim is decreed against B, dismissed against C. B appeals to the High Court but A does not file any appeal or cross-objections. B's appeal is allowed. A appeals to the Privy Council impleading both B and C. His appeal against C is not maintainable because it amounts to a direct appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the trial Court which is not allowed under the law.[1]

18. Revision.—Where an appellate Court refuses to interfere in favour of a respondent on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to do so in the absence of cross-objections, it fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law within S. 115.[1] It has been held that no revision lies against an order refusing to add certain persons as parties to the appeal, as such an order is interlocutory in its nature.[2]

LAHORE.

Add the following as a proviso to R. 35 (4):—

Provided also in the case of the High Court, that in the absence of a Judge who passed a decree, or one or more Judges who passed a decree, either the Registrar or the Deputy Registrar of the Court shall sign the decree on behalf of such absent Judge or Judges; but that neither the Registrar nor the Deputy Registrar shall sign such decree on behalf of a Judge who dissented from the judgment of the Court.

Amendment of appellate decree. See Note 4, F.-N. (1).

1. Date of decree.—Under this rule, the date which the appellate decree shall bear is the date on which the judgment was delivered. Hence, the date of the decree for purposes of limitation for filing a second appeal is the date on which the judgment is delivered.[1] Compare O. 20, R. 7, ante.

2. Specification of relief.—The rule requires that the appellate decree must contain a clear specification of the relief granted. But where the decree did not specify the sum due to the appellant except by reference to the judgment and decree of the lower Court, it was held, that though the decree was informal, as the amount due to the decree-holder was ascertainable from the record, it was capable of execution, and execution should be allowed as a matter of equity, the defect in the decree being due to the mistake of the officers of the Court.[1] As to the construction of appellate decrees, see the undermentioned cases.[2]

O.41, R.35, Notes 3—5.

3. Costs.—See generally S. 35 and the notes thereon. The appellate decree must provide for the costs of the appeal as well as of the suit.[1] As regards the costs of the appeal, the appellate decree must state the amount of costs incurred by either party in the appellate Court. A party cannot recover any sum as costs of the appeal if it is not entered in the decree.[2] But the amount[3] or particulars[4] of the costs incurred in the lower Court need not be specified in the appellate decree and the same may be ascertained from the lower Court's decree.[5]

The appellate Court must finally determine by which of the parties the costs are to be paid: it cannot declare that the costs shall be borne by the party who will be unsuccessful in a suit to be hereafter brought.[6]

The appellate Court can deprive a successful party of his costs for sufficient reasons. Thus where a decree is confirmed on grounds wholly different from those on which it was based by the lower Court, the appeal may be dismissed without costs.[7]

4. Decree in appeal supersedes that of the lower Court.—See S. 38 Note 5 and S. 148, Note 9 and the undermentioned case.[1]

5. Court-fee.—S. 33 of the Code provides, that after judgment a decree shall follow. In the undermentioned case[1] it was held by Oldfield, J., that even after the disposal of the appeal and pending the preparation of a decree, a Court had power to direct the plaintiff-appellant to correct the valuation and to pay additional Court-fee. The reason given was that the collection

ORDER XLIV.

PAUPER APPEALS.

Who may appeal as pauper.

R. 1. [S. 592.] Any person entitled to prefer an appeal, who is unable to pay the fee required[2] for the memorandum of appeal, may present an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal[3], and may be allowed to appeal as a pauper, subject, in all matters, including the presentation[5] of such application, to the provisions relating to suits[4] by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable:

Procedure on application for admission of appeal.

Provided[6] that the Court shall reject the application unless, upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree appealed from, it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust.

[1877—S. 592; 1859—Ss. 369, 370.]

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes.
2. "Who is unable to pay the fee required"—See notes to O. 33, R. 1, ante.
3. Application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal.
4. Subject to the provision relating to suits by paupers.
5. In all matters including the presentation of such application.
6. Proviso to the rule.
7. Power to grant time for payment of Court-fee.
8. Power to order security for costs—See O. 41, R. 10.

10. Appeal.
11. Letters Patent appeal.
12. Privy Council appeal.
13. Limitation.
14. Revision.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The words "under the Code or any other law" which occurred in the old S. 592, after the words "Any person entitled" have been omitted in the present rule.
2. The words "including the presentation of such application" have been newly added so as to override the decision in I.L.R. 26 Mad. 369. (See Note 6, infra.) This order does not apply to appeals under the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926) and the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908).

2. "Who is unable to pay the fee required".—See Notes to O. 33, R. 1, ante.

3. Application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal.—Unlike the plaint in a pauper suit which forms an integral portion of the pauper application itself, the application for leave to appeal as a pauper is a distinct document from the memorandum of appeal accompanying the application. The memorandum of appeal itself cannot be treated as an application for leave to appeal as a pauper.[1]

4. Subject to the provision relating to suits by paupers.—The granting of leave to appeal as a pauper is subject to the provisions relating to suits by paupers as provided in O. 33. Thus if the appellant has entered into an agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the appeal[1] or has not stated with the utmost good faith, in his application, the whole of his assets[2] then his application for leave to appeal is liable to be rejected.

The application for leave to appeal as a pauper should be verified at its foot, as required by O. 33, R. 2.[3] But though it is not so verified, if it is accompanied by an affidavit in which the statements contained in the application are stated to be true and there is no falsehood or concealment in the application, the rule will be deemed to have been sufficiently complied with.[4] It has been held that the presentation of an application under this rule without a list of properties as required by R. 2 is not invalid and the same could be supplied after the limitation period.[5]

5. In all matters including the presentation of such application.—In the absence of these words in the corresponding section of the old Code, it was held by the High Court of Madras[1] that the rule as to presentation in person by a pauper applicant now contained in O. 33, R. 3 did not apply to pauper appellants. It is now clear that the application should be presented in the same manner as in the case of a person suing in forma pauperis, i.e., in person. But a pardanashin lady is however exempted from personal appearance under S. 132 of the Code and therefore, she need not present the application to appeal in forma pauperis in person.[2] The memorandum of appeal need not be presented in person.[3]

6. Proviso to the rule.—The proviso is mandatory.[1] In Saku Bai v. Ganpat, I.L.R. 28 Bom. 451, Jenkins, C.J., observed as follows:—

> "That proviso is a very necessary safeguard introduced by the legislature for the benefit of litigants who find themselves opposed by paupers and in our opinion the Court should be careful to see that the proviso is satisfied. It is to be noticed that the Court must come to its conclusion upon a perusal only of application, the judgment and the decree. This proviso is apt to be overlooked, but it would provide a safeguard against this, if the Judge or Bench admitting a pauper appeal were to express and record very briefly the reasons for granting leave so that the Bench before whom the appeal ultimately comes may have an assurance that the leave was properly given."

A party cannot therefore be allowed to appeal as pauper unless the decree appealed from appears to be contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust.[2] But unlike R. 11 of O. 41 which empowers the Court to call for the records, the Court is restricted under this proviso to a perusal of the judgment and decree appealed against and has no discretionary power to go into the record.[3] It is not necessary for the Court to arrive at a definite and final conclusion that the decree is contrary to law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. It is enough if the Court finds that there is a substantial question of law or the appellant has a prima facie good case.[4]

A Full Bench of the High Court of Patna[5] and the High Court of Lahore[6] have held that a mere issue of a notice to the respondent under App. G, Form No. 11 is no ground for holding that the Court is satisfied as to the conditions laid down in the proviso, and that the respondent appearing in answer to the notice is entitled to urge that the application should be rejected on the ground that the conditions of the proviso have not been satisfied. The High Courts of Madras[7] and Allahabad[8] have, on the other hand, held that a notice issued to the respondent under Form No. 11 is only to state the objections of the respondent in respect of the pauperism of the applicant, and that the respondent has no locus standi to urge at that stage that the proviso is not satisfied.

7. Power to grant time for payment of Court-fee.—The rejection of an application for leave to appeal as a pauper does not ipso facto carry with it the rejection of the memorandum of appeal filed along with it.[1] The memorandum of appeal is a separate document before the Court which remains for disposal after the rejection of the application and the Court has power under S. 149 of the Code to give further time for the payment of the requisite Court-fee stamp and admit the appeal.[2] The memorandum of appeal though originally unstamped is not a nullity and can be validated with effect from the date of the presentation, by the payment of the Court-fee.[3] The appellate Court can also, in a fit case, excuse the delay under S. 5 of the Limitation Act and admit the appeal after the expiry of the limitation, on payment of the full Court-fee.[4]

9. Cross-objection or cross appeal by a pauper respondent.—See Notes to O. 41, R. 22.

10. Appeal.—An order under this rule is not appealable either under S. 104 or under O. 43, R. 1.[1] As to the maintainability of a Letters Patent Appeal, see next note.

11. Letters Patent Appeal.—It was held by the High Courts of Allahabad[1] and Madras[2] in cases decided under the old Code that an order rejecting an application under this rule was not appealable under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The decisions of the Madras High Court abovementioned were however dissented from in a later Full Bench case of the same High Court,[3] though the point for decision in the Full Bench was not with reference to an order under this rule. In a recent case[4] the Madras High Court without definitely deciding the question as to the appealability or otherwise under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, refused to interfere in appeal on the ground that the matter is one of exercise of discretion by the Court. See also S. 104, Note 6.

12. Privy Council Appeal.—This rule contemplates the appellate Court perusing the judgment of a subordinate Court, and not the Court where judgment is appealed from, perusing its own judgment.[1] O. 44 does not therefore apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council and the High Court has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal in forma pauperis to the Privy Council.[2] But the petitioner may apply in England for such leave in accordance with the rule that govern such applications.[3]

13. Limitation.—Under Art. 170, Schedule I of the Limitation Act the period of limitation for presenting an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis is 30 days from the date of the decree appealed against.[1]

Inquiry into pauperism.

R. 2. [S. 593.] The inquiry into the pauperism of the applicant may be made either by the Appellate Court or under the orders of the Appellate Court by the Court from whose decision the appeal is preferred:

Provided that, if the applicant was allowed to sue or appeal as a pauper in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, no further inquiry in respect of his pauperism shall be necessary, unless the Appellate Court sees cause to direct such inquiry.

1. Inquiry into pauperism.—If the pauper applicant—appellant had been allowed in the trial Court to sue as a pauper, no fresh enquiry as regards his pauperism is necessary unless the appellate Court sees reason to require it. Otherwise enquiry into his pauperism is necessary, and such enquiry may be made by the appellate Court itself or under its direction, by the trial Court. In the latter case, the report of the trial Court as regards pauperism does not operate as a final disposal of the application, and does not affect the power of the appellate Court to consider and decide whether leave should or should not be granted.[1]

APPEALS TO THE KING IN COUNCIL.

"Decree," defined.

R. 1. [S. 594.] In this Order, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, the expression "decree" shall include a final order.

Application to Court whose decree complained of.

R. 2. [S. 598.] Whoever desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council shall apply by petition to the Court whose decree is complained of.

[1877—S. 598.]

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Appeals in forma pauperis.
3. Limitation.

1. Scope of the rule.—A party desirous of appealing to His Majesty in Council should apply by a petition to the Court whose decree is complained of. Where there are two appeals from two decrees although they are decided by a common judgment two separate applications are necessary even though both the decrees were based on one common judgment.[1]

Where A appeals to the High Court making B a party to the appeal and succeeds in the appeal, B is entitled to present a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and the High Court, in such petition, is not competent to go into the question whether he has any locus standi to maintain the application.[2]

2. Appeals in forma pauperis.—See Note 13 to O. 44, R. 1.

An order for leave to appeal in forma pauperis takes effect from its date and has no effect whatever on costs incurred before that date.[1]

3. Limitation.—An application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council must be filed within 90 days of the date of decree or order appealed from, under Art. 179 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Where the decree is modified on review, the time will begin to run from the date of the decree passed on review.[1]

Where the Court is closed on the last day prescribed for the application, it may be presented on the next re-opening day.[2] In calculating the period of limitation the day on which the decree or order appealed from is pronounced or dated should be excluded.[3] S. 12, sub-S. (2) of the Limitation Act of 1877 was restricted to applications for leave to appeal as a pauper and hence it was held that the time spent in getting a copy of the decree could not be excluded in computing the period of limitation.[4] Under the present S. 12, sub-S. (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908 such time can be clearly excluded in computing the period of limitation for an application for leave to appeal under this rule.[5] Sub-S. (3) of S. 12 of that Act is however not applicable to applications for leave to appeal and therefore the time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment cannot be excluded.[6]

S. 6 of the Limitation Act, 1908 does not apply to application for the leave to appeal.[7]

Objection to grant of leave. See Note 4, Pts. (4), (5) and (6).

Special leave by the judicial committee. See Note 2, Pt. (2).

1. Legislative changes:—

In sub-R. (2) the words "shall direct notice" have been substituted for the words "may direct notice" which occurred in the corresponding section of the Code of 1882.

2. Scope of the rule.—This rule must be read with S. 109, Cl. (c) and S. 110. A party wishing to file an appeal to His Majesty in Council, should file a petition to the High Court under this rule for the issue of a certificate that the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110 or is 'otherwise fit' for appeal.[1]

This rule does not restrict the power or prerogative of the Judicial Committee to grant special leave to appeal. See Notes under S. 112, ante and the following cases.[2] In Motichand v. Ganga Prasad,[2-a] Lord Davey in delivering the judgment of the Board observed as follows:—"Where a party in an Indian case comes to this Board and asks for special leave to appeal the matter being under the appealable value, their Lordships think that he should first apply to the Court below for a certificate under the second part of S. 600 namely that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council".

3. Certificate as to fulfilment of the requirements of S. 110.—See Note 10 to S. 109 and Notes to S. 110, ante.

4. Certificate as to fitness.—It is the certificate granting leave to appeal and not the order for such certificate, which the Judicial Committee will consider and act upon: and unless the certificate upon which leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify that leave, it will be held not to have been properly given.[1] In Radhakrishna Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar[2] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pointed out that where an appeal is certified to be otherwise fit, it is of the utmost importance that the certificate should on the face of it, show clearly the grounds upon which it is based. There should be an indication of the nature of the question that is involved in the appeal and that the discretion conferred by S. 109, Cl. (c) was invoked or was exercised. Their Lordships think it should be brought to the attention of the Indian Courts that these certificates are of great consequence, that they seriously affect the rights of litigant parties, and that they ought to be given in such a form that it is impossible to mistake their meaning upon their face". Even if the High Court refuses a certificate it is desirable that the reasons for such refusal should be stated.[3]

The respondent can raise a preliminary objection before the Judicial Committee on the ground that the order granting leave is ultra vires and that hence the appeal is not maintainable.[4] But objection as to valuation, should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity.[5] The Privy Council will not interfere with any question of valuation unless it can be shown that some item has improperly been made the subject of valuation, or excluded therefrom, or that there is some fundamental principle affecting the valuation which renders it unsound.[6]

Certificate if can be granted after final adjudication by the Judicial Committee.—The certificate under this rule cannot be granted after there has been a final adjudication in the matter by the Judicial Committee. In Neki v. Chejju Ram[7] the plaintiff's suit which was decreed in the trial Court was reversed by the High Court. The plaintiff then filed a petition for leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee as also an application for a review. The latter application was granted and the High Court reversed its original judgment. The defendant took the matter in appeal to the Privy Council which held that the application for review was not maintainable and dismissed the suit restoring the first judgment of the High Court. Subsequently the plaintiff pressed his original petition for leave to appeal and the High Court granted leave holding that the petition was still alive, and not disposed of. The Privy Council reversed the order granting leave holding that there was no suit existing after the decision of the Judicial Committee and that no leave could therefore be granted.

5. Ex parte grant of leave to appeal.—An ex parte order granting leave to appeal is liable to be rescinded if it is obtained by any misrepresentation or concealment of fact which ought to have been disclosed.[1]

Consolidation of suits.

4. [New.] For the purposes of pecuniary valuation, suits involving substantially the same questions for determination and decided by the same judgment may be consolidated: but suits decided by separate judgments shall not be consolidated, notwithstanding that they involve substantially the same questions for determination.

Synopsis.

1. Consolidation of suits.
2. Inherent power to consolidate.
3. "Judgment," meaning of.
4. Costs.

1. Consolidation of suits.—There was no provision under the old Code corresponding to this rule and there was a conflict of opinion as to whether, and when, two suits could be consolidated together for the purpose of reaching the pecuniary limit necessary for an appeal to the Privy Council. According to the High Court of Allahabad, suits, though decided by separate judgments could be consolidated provided the questions involved in them were substantially the same, and the property affected by the suits were also the same.[1] According to the High Court of Calcutta, such consolidation was not permissible unless the suits had been decided by the same judgment.[2] The present rule gives effect to the latter view, and no consolidation is permissible under the present Code, unless the suits have been decided by the same judgment. The object of the rule is that where there are appeals from one judgment involving substantially the same question for determination before the Privy Council, they may be consolidated if, in the aggregate, the value of the appeals amount to the appealable minimum.[3] But in interpreting the words "same judgment," the spirit of the rule should be observed and a narrow interpretation should not be given to it.[4] Where the judgment in one suit is merely a copy of the other[5] or where the judgment in one suit merely refers to the judgment in the other, and, adopting its reasons, and passes a decree accordingly,[6] the suits must, for the purposes of this rule be regarded as having been decided by the same judgment. Where the evidence in the two suits was, at the request of the parties, considered as a whole, and the Court came to a decision on the whole of the evidence in favour of a party, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that it was a proper case to which the procedure sanctioned by this rule should be applied.[7] But the rule allows consolidation only for the purpose of making good a defect in pecuniary valuation, and not a defect of any other kind. In the case cited below the same judgment affirmed the lower Court's judgment in part relating to one defendant and modified it in part relating to another defendant. In regard to the former part, there was no substantial question of law involved and in regard to the latter part the appealable value was less than Rs. 10,000. Both defendants applied jointly for leave to appeal. It was held that leave should be refused.[8]

The rule applies only to appeals to the King in Council and not to appeals to the High Court.[9]

2. Inherent power to consolidate.—The rule does not limit the inherent power of the High Court to consolidate appeals to the Privy Council for the purpose of security for costs and for saving expenses[1] though such power cannot be exercised for settling pecuniary valuation when the rule forbids it in cases governed by different judgments.[2]

3. "Judgment" meaning of.—The word "judgment" refers to the judgment appealed against and not the judgment of the Court below.[1] The fact that there was a common judgment in two suits in the trial Court is no ground for consolidating the suits under this rule unless there is a common judgment in the High Court also.[2]

4. Costs.—The effect of an order of consolidation of several appeals under this rule is to make them a single appeal, and if costs are awarded against the respondents, they are jointly and severally liable for the whole costs.[1]

Remission of dispute to Court of first instance.

R. 5. [New.] In the event of any dispute arising between the parties as to the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, or as to the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, the Court to which a petition for a certificate is made under rule 2 may, if it thinks fit, refer such dispute for report to the Court of first instance, which last-mentioned Court shall proceed to determine such amount or value and shall return its report together with the evidence to the Court by which the reference was made.

1. Remission of dispute as to amount or value of the subject-matter.—This rule gives effect to the practice followed under the old Code a practice sanctioned by the Judicial Committee of ascertaining by evidence and enquiry as to the true value of the subject-matter in appeal when there is a dispute regarding the same.[1]

A remand under this rule is unnecessary and should not be made when an issue as to valuation was raised and decided in the trial Court and the parties acquiesced in the finding on that issue.[2]

Where there is a remand under this rule the Court to which the remand is made should itself carry out the investigation and cannot remit it to some

3. Appeal.—Under O. 43, R. 1, Cl. (v) an appeal lies against an order made by any Court other than a High Court refusing the grant of a certificate under this rule and the period of limitation is 30 days from the date of the order under Art. 153 of the Indian Limitation Act.

6. Form of security—Proviso.
7. Extension of time.
8. Record not to include unnecessary papers.
9. Delay.

1. Amendments after 1908.—The following alterations have been introduced by the Amending Act XXVI of 1920:—

(1) The words "Ninety days or such further period not exceeding sixty days as the Court may, upon cause shown, allow" have been substituted for the words "six months".

(2) The words "in cash or in Government securities" after the word "security" have been newly added.

(3) The proviso to sub-R. (1) is new.

2. Scope of the rule.—The rule prescribes the course to be followed by the applicant (appellant) after the issue of a certificate as to fitness of appeal. He should furnish security for the costs of the respondent and also deposit the expenses for translating, transcribing, indexing and transmitting the records within the time fixed by clause (1).[1] The rule does not, according to the Chief Court of Oudh, apply to cases where special leave to appeal is granted by the Privy Council under S. 112, and the High Court has no jurisdiction to call upon the appellant to deposit security without any order of the Privy Council.[1-a] The High Court of Calcutta,[2] on the other hand, has held, in a case arising under the old Code, that it has been the practice of that Court to treat the section as applicable, and that the High Court has power to extend the time for depositing the costs of transmitting the records under the section.

3. "Date of the decree" meaning of.—The words "date of the decree" mean the date on which the decree is pronounced and not the date on which it is signed by the Judge.[1]

4. Security and deposit.—The appellant should furnish security for the costs of the respondent.[1] The security should after the amendment of the section by Act XXVI of 1920 be in cash or in Government securities unless the Court acting under the proviso[1-a] orders that some other form of security may be furnished. Where Government securities are furnished as security, the market value thereof at the time of deposit should be taken into consideration.[2] Solicitors for the respondent in England can claim payment of their bill of costs from the money deposited as security.[3] A Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad[4] has held that it is open to the decree-holder by way of caution to attach the security deposited by the judgment-debtor so as to prevent him from dealing with it any further.

5. Security in case of consolidated appeal.—When two appeals are consolidated for valuation, security has to be furnished in respect of each of the appeals. It is not enough if security is given in one appeal alone.[1]

6. Form of security—Proviso.—If an appellant to the Privy Council wishes to furnish a security in any other form than in cash or in Government bonds, he must apply for a special order to that effect and obtain it simultaneously with the order granting the certificate. It cannot be applied for or granted afterwards.[1]

7. Extension of time.—Prior to Act XXVI of 1920 the security or the deposit had to be furnished or made within six months from the date of the decree complained of or within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate, whichever was the later date. The period of six months has, under the rule as now amended, been reduced to 90 days; but the Court may extend the said period by a further period of sixty days "on cause shown". Under the rule, as it originally stood, it had been held by the Privy Council and by the High Courts that the period of six months could be extended by the High Court for "cogent reasons".[1] It was held that the misapprehension of the appellant as to the date of the re-opening of the High Court could not be considered to be a "cogent reason" justifying an extension of time.[2] As to whether the poverty of the appellant was a "cogent reason," it was held by the High Courts of Madras and the Chief Court of Lower Burma that it was not;[3] while the Chief Court of Punjab held that it was a sufficient ground for extending time.[4] Even under the present rule, the High Courts of Madras and Rangoon have followed their earlier view on the point.[5]

O. 45, R. 7, Notes 7—8.

Can the period of six weeks or the period of sixty days be extended by the High Court? It has been held that the period of six weeks cannot be extended by the High Court.[6] There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the period of sixty days could itself be enlarged by the High Court. According to the High Court of Bombay, the High Court has, by virtue of R. 9 of the Privy Council rules, such power;[7] while according to the High Courts of Allahabad,[8] Madras,[9] Patna,[10] Rangoon[11] and the Chief Court of Oudh,[12] the High Court has no such power and cannot extend the time beyond that which is provided in this rule.

8. Record not to include unnecessary papers.—The Judicial Committee has repeatedly pointed out and condemned the practice of printing an enormous mass of wholly irrelevant and unnecessary matter in the preparation of the record.[1] Only so much of the records as are material to the appeal should be printed and transmitted to the Privy Council.[2] It has been held in the undermentioned cases[3] that where there is an appeal against the regular decree, such proceedings as application for review of the judgment and orders thereon ought not to form part of the record to be transmitted to England.

The Registrar of the High Court should determine in the first instance what papers should be included in the paper book.[4]

9. Delay.—Where there was a great delay of three years in the preparation of the records, the office was called on to report the reason for the delay so that if the delay was due to inaction on the part of the appellant, the appeal may be certified as not being effectually prosecuted by the appellant.[1] If there is great delay, the Judicial Committee will peremptorily order the Courts in India to transmit the records at once.[2]

Extent of security. See Note 4, F.-N. (2) and Note 5, F.-N. (2).

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "the grant of a certificate for the admission" in Cl. (1) have been substituted for the words "the admission of any appeal under this chapter".

O. 45, R. 13, Notes 1—4.

2. The words "admitting the appeal" which occurred after the word "Court" in the old section have been omitted in Cl. (1) of the present rule. (As to the effect of this omission, see Note 3.)

3. The words "by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise" have been newly added in Cl. (c).

2. Court.—The word "Court" in this rule means the High Court and not the Subordinate Court of original jurisdiction. A subordinate Judge or a District Judge has no jurisdiction to stay execution of a decree of the High Court. The provisions of this rule are meant entirely to govern all questions regarding the execution of the decree under appeal before the Privy Council and the provisions of O. 41, R. 6 do not apply thereto.[1]

3. Stay of execution if can be ordered before the granting of certificate.—In cases decided under the old Code it was held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[1] Calcutta[2] and Madras[3] that an application for stay of execution could not be granted before the appeal to the Privy Council was finally admitted. The reason for such a view was the wording of para. 1 of the corresponding S. 608 of the old Code which referred to the "Court admitting the appeal." The High Court of Bombay[4] on the other hand, held, that the words "admitting the appeal" had no reference to the time when the Court was to give directions but merely descriptive of the Court which was to give them and that the High Court could stay execution of its decree although the appeal had not yet been admitted. The words "admitting the appeal" have now been omitted in this rule but the omission has been held not to affect the construction of the rule and that even now no stay can be ordered under this rule before the certificate is granted.[5] It has been held in the cases cited below[6] that the High Court has inherent power to stay execution in appropriate cases even before the certificate is granted.

4. Taking such security from the respondent.—Under Cl. (b) of the rule the Court may allow execution of the decree directing the respondent to furnish security for the due performance of any order which the Judicial Committee may make on appeal.[1] The object of the security is to indemnify the appellant for any loss that may be occasioned by the execution being taken out.[2]

O.45. R.13. Notes 4—6.

Where the High Court orders execution to proceed on the decree-holder furnishing security and the latter does not do so the order, operates in fact, as a stay of execution. The failure on the part of the respondent decree-holder to give security will not therefore deprive him of the benefit of S. 15 of the Limitation Act so as to bar a fresh application for execution after the Privy Council appeal is dismissed.[3]

5. Stay of execution on taking security from the appellant, Cl. (c).— The grant of an order for stay of the execution of the decree pending appeal is in the discretion of the Court and the appellant should show 'special cause' for the exercise of the discretion in his favour. As a general rule, execution ought not to be stayed unless it would so upset things that in the event of the appeal being successful the status quo ante could not be restored or could be restored only with great difficulty.[1] The principle underlying the granting of stay of execution is that "the successful party in litigation, i.e., the ultimately successful party is to reap the fruits of that litigation and not obtain merely a barren success".[2]

Proceedings between a preliminary decree and the final decree, as for instance, in partition suits, are proceedings in the suit and not in execution. The High Court has therefore no power to stay such proceedings under this rule. The Privy Council which has seizin of the appeal can alone stay such proceedings.[3] Similarly proceedings in a Revenue Court to eject the defendant instituted after obtaining possession in execution of the decree of the High Court are not proceedings in execution of the decree within the meaning of this rule.[4]

Where the Court orders security to be furnished, it is advisable to specify definitely the time within which the security must be tendered, and to give such further directions as may be necessary to ensure the intention of the Court being carried out.[5]

6. Stay of execution in view of application for special leave.— The High Court of Calcutta[1] has held that it has inherent power to order stay of execution of its decree in view of an application for special leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee.

7. Stay of execution after special leave to appeal is granted by the Privy Council.—It has been held by the Privy Council in Nityamani v. Madhusudan Sen,[1] that the High Court has power to stay execution of a decree although an appeal against that decree has been admitted by special leave of the Privy Council. Their Lordships observed: "The learned Judges of the High Court are in a much better position than the members of the Board to determine in any particular case whether execution ought to be stayed and if so upon what terms and conditions and to what extent stay of execution ought to be granted." The contrary view taken in the earlier decisions[1-a] are no longer good law.

8. Stay of execution by Privy Council.—As a general rule, in appeals pending before the Privy Council an application to stay proceedings in execution ought always to be made in the first instance to the High Court which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the particular case, and has knowledge of the details which the Judicial Committee cannot possess on an interlocutory application.[1] But if the High Court refuses to grant stay, the Privy Council may, if it thinks fit, either order stay itself[2] or direct the appellant to apply again to the High Court with its opinion as to the advisability of granting stay.[3]

9. Security after execution.—The High Court can under sub-R. (1), direct the respondent to furnish security for the due performance of any order which may be made by His Majesty in Council, even in cases where the decree has been executed.[1] But the party seeking to obtain such security must show special cause such as waste or improper dealing with the property on the part of the respondent.[2]

10. To give such other directions.—Where a mortgage suit decreed ex parte was directed by the High Court to be reheard and, during the pendency of an appeal to the Privy Council against that order one of the parties applied for stay, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that it had power under this rule as well as under its inherent powers to stay further proceedings in the suit.[1]

11. By the appointment of a Receiver.—Under Cl. (d) of the rule the Court has power to appoint a Receiver to safeguard the interests of the appellant. But the principles on which a Receiver should be appointed are the same as those contained in O. 40. In the absence of any allegation of waste or risk of loss, no Receiver ought to be appointed under this rule.[1] The High Court has power to appoint a Receiver even in cases where special leave to appeal is granted by the Judicial Committee.[2]

12. Powers of the High Court pending appeal to the Privy Council.—

Power to amend decree.—According to the High Courts of Calcutta[1] and Lahore[2] the decree can be amended even after leave to appeal is granted and before the records are transmitted to the Privy Council. The High Court of Allahabad[3] on the other hand seems to hold a contrary view namely that it cannot amend the decree which is the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council. See Note 9 to S. 152 under the heading "Amendment pending appeal against decree."

Power to add parties.—The High Court has no power to direct the addition of parties after leave to appeal to the Privy Council is granted.[4] (Compare also Note 32 to O. 1, R. 10.)

Power to implead legal representatives or to order abatement.—Where legal representatives have to be brought on record on the death of a party pending appeal to the Privy Council, the practice of the Judicial Committee is that, on an application, the High Court will make an enquiry, take evidence and transmit the same to the Privy Council with its own opinion as to the substitution of parties.[5] The same rule of practice would appear to hold in the case of abatement.[6]

13. Appeal.—An order refusing to stay execution in the exercise of the discretion under this rule is not a "judgment" under Cl. (15) of the Letters Patent and is not appealable.[1]

O.45, R.15, Notes 1—4.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The provision contained in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the corresponding section in the old Code which related to the enforcement of the liability of the surety for costs have been omitted under the present rule, in view of S. 145 of the Code.

2. Para. 4 has been newly introduced by Act XXVI of 1920.

2. "Whoever desires to obtain execution."—It is not necessary in all cases that each person interested in the execution of a particular order of His Majesty in Council should obtain a separate transmission of the order when it has been already transmitted to the lower Court at the instance of one of the successful parties.[1] Under O. 21, R. 15 it is open to some of the decree-holders, who have obtained permission, to execute the Privy Council decree on behalf of all the decree-holders.[2] But where the decree is in favour of several persons declaring that each is entitled to a separate and distinct share each plaintiff is bound to apply separately for execution and an order of transmission obtained by some of the plaintiffs alone cannot be taken advantage of by the others.[3] Where a party having obtained an order in council delays or refuses to lodge the order, the opposite party can apply under this rule asking for a summary order against that party to lodge the order so that execution might follow in terms of the judgment of the Board.[4]

3. "Shall apply by petition".—The provisions of the rule are mandatory and an execution application filed without having filed a petition for transmission under this rule is incompetent. But where no such objection was taken in previous execution proceedings it cannot be allowed at a later stage of the proceedings.[1]

4. "Accompanied by a certified copy."—A certified copy of the decree sought to be executed should be filed along with the petition.[1] A production of a copy of the judgment is not enough.[2] But the object of the requirement of a certified copy of the decree is only to ensure that proper intimation upon the subject of any order in council should be supplied to the Courts in India. The rule should not be construed as restricting the only possible evidence of the decree or order to the certified copy.[3] Where, therefore, along with an application for the execution of the decree of the

O.45, R.15, Notes 4—8.

Privy Council a plain print copy of the decree was filed with an affidavit showing that it was the decree of the Privy Council it was held that it must be held to be a true copy of the decree within the meaning of this rule.[4]

The practice in regard to Privy Council decrees is that the original decree is given to the successful party or to one of the successful parties and it is the duty of that person to file that original decree in the High Court.[5]

5. "To the Court from which the appeal to His Majesty was preferred".—The application under Sub-R. (1) should be made to the Court from whose decree the appeal was preferred to the Privy Council. An application made to any other Court is not competent.[1]

6. Jurisdiction of Patna High Court.—The High Court of Patna has no jurisdiction to execute an order in Council passed in an appeal from the Calcutta High Court. The proper Court to which an application for execution should be made is the High Court of Calcutta.[1]

7. Functions under the rule merely ministerial.—The duties of the High Court in receiving and transmitting orders of His Majesty in Council under this rule are purely ministerial.[1] It is thus not competent for the High Court to consider and discuss the effect or propriety of the order in Council and disallow costs or interest[2] or to hold that the decree of the Privy Council is void and incapable of execution on the ground that one of the appellants died during the pendency of the appeal.[3] If a party feels aggrieved by the order, the proper course for him is to apply to the Privy Council for redress.[4]

8. To what Court, order should be transmitted.— The High Court should transmit the order for execution to the Court which passed the decree. Where, however, such Court ceases to have territorial jurisdiction over the matter the order can be transmitted to the Court which has jurisdiction to execute it.[1]

O.45, R.15, Notes 8-A—11.

8-A. "Shall give such directions, etc."—Under Sub-R. (2) of the Rule it is the High Court that can give necessary directions in regard to execution.[1] But it has been held that neither the High Court nor the Subordinate Court has power to stay execution or adjourn an application for execution on the ground that an application for review of the decree was pending before the Privy Council.[2]

9. Application by assignee of order in council.—Where an order of the Privy Council is transmitted under this rule to the District Court as the Court which passed the first decree, the latter Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application made by an assignee of the decree under O. 21, R. 16, to recognise the assignment, and to allow him to execute the decree.[1]

10. Liability of surety.—The liability of the surety can be enforced under S. 145 of the Code. But the surety is not precluded from questioning the validity of the security bond in execution proceedings.[1] Where the surety bond amounts to a mortgage it should be enforced by a separate suit and not by way of execution.[2]

11. Restitution.—Where during the pendency of an appeal to the Privy Council, certain property which had been decreed to the plaintiff and which had been delivered to him, was attached and sold away in Court auction in execution of another decree against the plaintiff, and subsequently the Privy Council allows the appeal of the defendant and dismisses the suit, the defendant is entitled to recover back the property by way of restitution. His right to restitution is not affected by the fact that the auction purchaser is not a party to the Privy Council appeal.[1] The fact that the party applying for restitution is not a party to the Privy Council appeal does not disentitle him to apply for such restitution if the order of the Privy Council also enures to his benefit.[2]

As to whether proceedings by way of restitution are or are not proceedings in execution, so as to necessitate an application under this rule, see Notes 30 and 33 to S. 144 and the undermentioned cases.[3]

O.45, R.15, Notes 12—16.

12. Mesne profits.—A party who is dispossessed of immoveable property in pursuance of a decree of the High Court is entitled to get back, by way of restitution not merely the property of which he was dispossessed, but also mesne profits for the period for which he was out of possession.[1]

13. Interest.—No interest on costs can be allowed by the High Court or the Court of the first instance, when the order of the Privy Council is silent as to interest.[1] But if interest is awarded by the Privy Council but no rate is specified, the executing Court can grant interest at the rate granted in the decree of the High Court or at a reasonable rate.[2] (See also Note 17 to S. 34 and Note 35 to S. 35.)

14. Costs.—When the successful party in appeal before the Privy Council is awarded the costs of the appeal in England and also the costs incurred in the Indian Courts, he is entitled to get also the costs of translating the records of the appeal and of transmitting them to England.[1] The amount of such costs is left to be ascertained by the High Court and is not assessed by the Privy Council office.[2]

15. Rate of exchange—Sub-R. 3.—According to the view taken by the Calcutta High Court[1] the "rate of exchange" means the rate existing at the time when the order in Council is made and not at the time when execution is taken. The High Court of Allahabad has, on the other hand, held that the words "for the time being" refer to the year in which the amount is realised or paid, or execution taken out and not the year in which the decree or order of the Council was passed.[2]

16. Letters Patent Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing to transmit for execution the order of His Majesty in Council. Such an order is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.[1]

17. Dismissal for want of prosecution.—Where an appeal preferred against the decree of the High Court is dismissed by the Judicial Committee for want of prosecution, the order is not a judicial determination at all and limitation for execution of the High Court's decree runs from the date of the decree of the High Court.[1]

Reference by Court without jurisdiction. See Note 5, Pt. (5).

Practice and procedure. See Note 8.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The word "final" which occurred in the old section has now been substituted by the words "not subject to appeal". (See Note 4.)

2. The words "or the construction of a document . . . . merits" have been omitted.

2. Scope of the rule.—A right of reference is fundamentally distinct from a right of appeal: the former vests in the Court and the latter vests in the suitor.[1] The object of the provision for reference is to enable the subordinate Courts to obtain, in non-appealable cases, the opinion of the High Court in advance on a question of law and thereby avoid the commission of an error which could not be remedied later on.[2] But the right of reference is subject to the conditions prescribed by this rule and unless they are fulfilled, the High Court cannot entertain a reference from a subordinate tribunal.[3] The rule requires the following conditions to be satisfied to enable a subordinate Court to make a reference:—

(1) There must be a pending suit or appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal, or a pending proceeding in execution of such decree. (See Note 3.)

(2) A question of law or usage having the force of law must arise in the course of such suit, appeal or proceeding, and

(3) The Court trying the suit or appeal or executing the decree entertains a reasonable doubt on such question. (See Note 7.)

The provisions of this Order are made applicable to proceedings under the special or local Acts mentioned hereunder.[4]

3. Reference lies only where question arises in suit, appeal or execution of decree.—A reference can be made only in a suit or appeal or in execution of a decree[1] and only on a matter about which the parties are litigating, that is, on a matter wherein the Court is called on to adjudicate on the opposite contentions of the parties.[2] Thus no reference can be made under this rule in the following cases:—

- (1) In a proceeding against a pleader under the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879.[3]
- (2) In a proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.[4]
- (3) In an application for review.[5]
- (4) In an application for a new trial.[6]
- (5) In an application for sanction to prosecute.[7]
- (6) In an enquiry as to the proper Court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal.[8]
- (7) In an enquiry in an application under S. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act[8-a] or in any proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act.[8-b]

The question on which a reference can be made must have arisen before or on the hearing of a suit or an appeal or in a pending proceeding in execution of a decree. A question arising subsequent to the hearing of a suit or appeal cannot be the subject of a reference under this rule, unless it arises in execution of the decree.[9]

The question must also be one which actually arises for decision in the proceedings before the Court. The rule is not intended to provide for suppositious cases which do not actually arise for decision.[10]

The right of reference is analogous to a right of appeal in that it is not a mere matter of procedure, and, consequently, cannot be exercised in proceedings other than those referred to in the section, by the application of S. 141 of the Code which only makes the procedure of the Code in respect of suits, applicable to miscellaneous proceedings.[11] (See Note 7, S. 141.)

4. 'Decree not subject to appeal'.—No reference can be made in a suit or appeal unless the decree that might be passed therein is one against which no appeal lies.[1] Similarly no reference can be made in a proceeding in execution of a decree unless the decree is a non-appealable one.[2] The reason is, that in appealable cases a remedy to correct possible errors is provided by the appeal.[3]

5. 'Court' meaning of.—The word 'Court' in this rule means a Court of Civil Judicature.[1] Thus a Collector executing a decree transferred to him under S. 68 of the Code[2] or a Rent Controller enquiring into an application under S. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act[3] or a Registrar acting under the Indian Registration Act[4] is not a 'Court' and cannot make a reference under this rule. Where a Court refuses to entertain an appeal on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to do so, it has no power to make a reference on that matter under this section.[5] (See also Note 1 to S. 114, ante.)

6. No reference on question of fact.—A reference is allowed only on a question of law or usage having the force of law. No reference can be made on a question of fact.[1]

7. Reasonable doubt.—A reference can be made on a question of law only if the Judge entertains a reasonable doubt about it.[1] There cannot ordinarily be a reasonable doubt on a question clearly decided by the rulings of the High Court to which the Judge making the reference is subordinate, unless the authority of those rulings can be questioned in view of a more recent decision of the Privy Council.[1-a] Where, however, the ruling of a High Court is doubted in a later decision of the same Court and has been dissented from by the other High Courts, there may be room for a reasonable doubt sufficient to enable a subordinate Court to make a reference on the question.[2] But even, in such a case, the referring Court must entertain a reasonable doubt about the question and the mere fact that there are conflicting rulings is not by itself sufficient.[3] Similarly the Court cannot make a reference on a question on which it entertains no doubt merely because the parties apply for it.[4]

A reference is not bad merely because the question arises out of the action of a third person not a party to the suit.[5]

8. Statement of facts and Court's opinion.—In making the reference the Court should draw up a statement of the facts of the case, formulate the precise question of law or usage having the force of law on which opinion is sought for and must also give its opinion on the question.[1]

Where there was no statement of the case, no statement that the question arose on the trial of a suit and no statement of the Court's opinion, the High Court refused to answer the reference and sent it back for amendment.[2]

Judgment of High Court to be transmitted and case disposed of accordingly.

R. 3. [S. 619.] The High Court, after hearing the parties if they appear and desire to be heard, shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy of its judgment, under the signature of the Registrar, to the Court by which the reference was made; and such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court.

[1877—S. 619; 1861—Ss. 32 and 33.]

1. Dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court.—Upon receipt of the decision of the High Court, it is the duty of the referring Court to dispose of the case in conformity therewith. Thus where a Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs, contingent on the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court gave the opinion that the plaintiffs could not recover, it is not open to the referring Court after the receipt of the opinion, to allow the suit to be withdrawn by the plaintiff: judgment should be entered for the defendant.[1] The judgment by the High Court on a reference under this rule is not, by itself, a decree but simply a statement of the grounds in conformity with which the referring Court is to dispose of the case as provided by this rule. Therefore the High Court cannot review its judgment passed on a reference made to it.[2]

R. 4. [S. 620.] The costs (if any) consequent on a reference for the decision of the High Court shall be costs in the case.

1. Costs of reference.—The costs of a reference to the High Court cannot be dealt with separately but must be dealt with when awarding the costs of the suit.[1] The High Court of Bombay, is, however, of opinion that the award of the costs of the reference is in the discretion of the Court.[2] This does not seem to be correct on principle. The rule requires that the costs of reference shall be costs in the case and S. 35 which gives the Court a discretion to award costs, is expressly made subject to the conditions and limitations prescribed by the rules of the first schedule.

1. Scope of the rule.—Where the lower Court has not complied with the conditions laid down in R. 1 of this order, the High Court has power under this rule to return the case for amendment in proper form.[1] The rule is also wide enough to enable the High Court to quash the order of reference itself made by the lower Court.[2]

(2) On receiving the record and statement, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the suit or to return the plaint for presentation to such other Court as it may in its order declare to be competent to take cognizance of the suit.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. See S. 16, Note 1, Pt. (1).

1. Scope of the rule.—S. 16 of the Prov. Small Cause Courts Act. 1887 provides that a suit cognisable by a Court of Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable. Where an ordinary Court entertains a suit cognisable by a Court of Small Causes it exercises a jurisdiction not vested in it and if it refuses to entertain an original suit on the ground that it is cognisable by a Court of Small Causes, it refuses to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it. A reference under this rule is limited to those cases where, the District Court is of the opinion that the Subordinate Court has held that it has or has no jurisdiction over the suit, and that such order is erroneous.[1]

O. 46, R.7, Notes 1—5.

The rule is only an enabling one and does not in any way cut down the jurisdiction of the appellate Court.[2] But a District Judge has power under this rule to make a reference whether the case is, or is not, pending in appeal before him.[3] Where a District Munsif returned a plaint as being cognisable only by a Court of Small Causes and the latter Court, however, returned it back as being cognisable only by the Munsif's Court, it was held that the correct procedure was either to proceed under R. 6 of this order itself or send the case to the District Judge for making a reference under this rule.[4]

2. "Court subordinate thereto".—The Court of Small Causes is a Court subordinate to the District Judge, and O. 46, R. 7 contemplates and allows a reference, to be made by the District Judge in cases tried by the Court of Small Causes.[1]

3. "If required by a party. shall".—Before a reference could be made under this rule it is a necessary condition that it must appear to the District Court that the Subordinate Court has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction.[1] Where it does so appear, and a party requires the District Court to make a reference, it is bound to do so.[2]

4. District Court should state its reasons.—A District Court when making a reference under this rule should state its reasons for considering the opinion of the Subordinate Court to be erroneous.[1]

5. Powers of the High Court under this rule.—Where a suit which is cognisable only by a Court of Small Causes is tried as an original suit by a District Munsif and the decree is reversed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal there are two remedies open to the aggrieved party:

(1) A revision under S. 115 of the Code.

(2) A reference under this rule.

Where a revision is preferred to the High Court, the latter is bound to set aside the decree of appellate Court as being passed in an appeal which was incompetent and therefore without jurisdiction.[1] It can also set aside the decree of both the Courts and return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.[2]

Where, however, a reference is made under this rule, it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta[3] and Patna[4] that the High Court is not bound to set aside the proceedings in all cases but has full power to consider the matter of jurisdiction or to deal with the case on the merits so as to do substantial justice without necessarily putting the parties to the expense of a fresh trial.

6. Interference with questions of fact.—On a reference under this rule the High Court will not as a rule interfere with findings of fact arrived at by the first Court on the evidence before it.[1]

REVIEW.

Application for review of judgment.

R. 1. [S. 623.] (1) Any person considering himself aggrieved[5]—

1—2.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Section 623 of the old Code provided that an application for review could be made to the Court which passed the decree or made the order; or to the Court (if any) to which the business of the former Court has been transferred. These latter words have been omitted in the present section in view of S. 150 of the Code newly introduced.

2. Scope of the rule.—It has been seen in Note 2 to S. 96, ante, that a right of appeal does not exist and cannot be assumed unless expressly given by statute or by rules having the force of statute. The same principle applies to a right of review also. Such a right does not, therefore, exist unless granted by statute.[1] S. 114 of the Code and this order expressly give such a right in certain cases the former being the substantive section containing a brief statement of the Court's general power of review and the latter providing the details of procedure.[2] These provisions constitute an exception to the general rule that when once a judgment is signed and pronounced it cannot afterwards be altered or added to (see O. 20, R. 3), and, as such, a right of review is exercisable only in the circumstances where it is distinctly provided by the statute.[3]

This rule is, in itself definitive of the limits within which a review is permitted by the Code[4] and, it follows from what has been stated above, that where a case falls within the class of cases contemplated by this rule, the Court cannot have an inherent power of review apart from the provisions of the rule.[5] Where, however, a case falls outside the class of such cases the Courts have, of course, inherent power to review their orders for the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court.[6]

The existence of a right of review does not bar a suit for the same relief.[7] Nor does the fact that an appeal can be filed against the decree afford any ground for refusing a review. The reason is that where there are two remedies open to a party, they should not as a rule be construed so as to operate in derogation of each other.[8] But the availability of an appeal as an obvious remedy will be a ground for refusing in the exercise of the Court's discretion, an application for review.[9]

3. Review and appeal—Distinction.—A review is not the same thing as, or a substitute for an appeal.[1] The two proceedings differ in very many particulars.

(1) The primary intention of a review is the reconsideration of the subject of the suit by the same Judge under certain conditions, while an appeal is a rehearing by another tribunal.[2]

(2) A point which may be a good ground of an appeal may not be a good ground for an application for review.[3] Thus an erroneous view of evidence or of law is no ground for a review though it may be a good ground for an appeal.[4]

(3) A review does not, of necessity reopen questions already decided between the parties. The matter in issue is only reopened when the application for review is accepted while, in the case of an appeal the matter is reopened as soon as an appeal is admitted.[5]

4. Review and amendment—Distinction.—A review and an amendment differ in the following particulars:—

(1) In the case of a review the correctness of the judgment and the decree is questioned, while in the case of an amendment of a decree the correctness of the judgment is assumed, but the jurisdiction to amend arises from the fact that the decree is not in accordance with the judgment.[1]

(2) Where an application for an amendment is allowed there is no need for a rehearing of a suit, while if an application for review is allowed a rehearing of the suit becomes necessary.[2]

(3) Where an application for review is granted the result is a new decree superseding the original decree and not merely some amendment thereof.[3]

5. "Person considering himself to be aggrieved".—It is only a "person aggrieved" by a decree or order that can apply for a review. A "person aggrieved" means a person who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully affected his title to something; it is not sufficient that he has lost something which he would have obtained if another order had been made.[1] A decree or order against a person not a party thereto, is on general principles of law, not binding on him. Such a person, therefore, cannot have a legal grievance against the order or decree, and, consequently, cannot apply for a review of the decree or order under this rule.[2] The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur, has, however, held that where an order has been made in a proceeding against a company which was not properly a party to the proceeding, a director of the company can file an application for review of the order.[3]

A minor, who is aggrieved by a decree or order passed against him may apply for a review under the same circumstances as an adult.[4] Similarly, the legal representatives of a deceased party who are materially affected by the decree are also entitled to apply under this rule.[5] Where sanction was granted to the Public Prosecutor to prosecute an attorney and an order was made granting leave to the attorney to appeal to the Privy Council it was held that the Public Prosecutor was a person aggrieved by the order granting leave to appeal and was entitled to apply for a review thereof.[6]

6. "Decree or order . . . . from which no appeal has been preferred."—If before the making of an application for review, an appeal from the decree sought to be reviewed has already been filed and is pending, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application for review.[1] Where,

O. 47, R. 1, Note 6.

however, the application for review is made first and thereafter an appeal is filed against the decree, the jurisdiction to deal with the application is not affected by the pendency of the appeal.[2] But where, before the application is heard, such appeal is disposed of on the merits[3] or under O. 41, R. 11[4] the appellate decree supersedes the decree or order appealed from and the result of allowing the application would be to interfere with the decree of the appellate Court; consequently, the Court which passed the decree or order cannot proceed with the application for review. Compare Note 12 to S. 96, ante and Notes 10 and 11 to O. 9, R. 13.

Where an appeal is withdrawn and thereafter, an application for review is filed, the application may be entertained and disposed of by the Court; the reason being that an appeal once withdrawn must be treated as if it had never been preferred at all within the meaning of this rule.[5] According to the High Court of Allahabad the principle is not affected by the fact that the application for review is filed first and the appeal is withdrawn later.[6] But according to the High Court of Bombay there is no jurisdiction to entertain the application so long as an appeal is pending, and the fact that the appeal is withdrawn subsequently will not cure the initial defect in making the application.[7]

O. 47, R. 1, Notes 7—10.

7. Filing of appeal pending application for review.—As has been seen in Note 6, ante the subsequent filing of an appeal against the decree sought to be reviewed does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the application for review but such jurisdiction ought in such cases to be exercised with the greatest care and only in a very strong case.[1] The fact that application for review of a judgment is pending will not, however, preclude the appellate Court from granting in appeal the relief claimed in the application.[2]

8. Decree or order from which no appeal is allowed—Cl. (b).—Any decree or order from which no appeal is allowed is open to review.[1]

9. Decision on reference from Court of Small Causes—Cl. (c).—Under the Code of 1859 no application lay for review of judgment by the High Court on a reference from a Court of Small Causes.[1] Even under this rule, the High Court has no power to review a judgment passed by it on a reference from a Subordinate Judge with Small Cause Court powers. The rule allows a review of judgment on a reference only from a Court of Small Causes.[2]

10. Discovery of new and important matter or evidence.—Where a litigant has obtained a judgment in a Court of justice, he is, by law, entitled not to be deprived of that judgment without solid grounds. Where, therefore, a review of a judgment is asked for by a party, the greatest care ought to be exercised by the Court in granting a review especially where the ground of review is the discovery of fresh evidence. It is so easy to the party who has lost his case, to see what the weak part of his case was, and the temptation to lay and procure evidence which will strengthen that weak part and put a different complexion upon that part of the case must be very strong.[1] The rule that permits a new trial to be granted on account of the discovery of new evidence has, therefore, been fenced round with many limitations. Thus the party asking for a new trial must show that there was no remissness on his part in adducing all possible evidence at the trial.[2] Further, the new evidence must be such as is presumably to be believed and such that, if adduced, it would practically be conclusive, i.e., evidence of such a class as to render it probable almost beyond doubt that the judgment would be different.[3] Where it is very doubtful whether the evidence, if produced, would have had any effect on the judgment, there is no ground for review.[4] In Mahabir Prasad v. Collector of Allahabad[5] where a suit was dismissed on two grounds namely, want of notice as required by law and the plaintiff being illegitimate, and a review was applied for on the ground of discovery of new evidence tending to establish the legitimacy of the plaintiff it was held that a review should not be granted inasmuch as the suit would still have to be dismissed on the question of notice. But the case would be different where the effect of the evidence, if adduced, would be to alter or cancel the decree. Thus the discovery of a document containing an admission of liability by the defendant[6] or the discovery of fraud,[7] would be a good ground for review. Similarly where a decree for restitution of conjugal rights was passed and subsequently it was discovered that the parties were related as cousins, such relationship rendering the marriage a nullity, it was held that there was a good ground for review.[8] Again where the parties were not aware of a previous judgment passed in another case between them, which if it had been placed before the Court would have resulted in different judgment, there is a good ground for review.[9]

In the undermentioned cases[10] it has been held that it is not necessary for granting a review on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter, that such evidence, if admitted would be conclusive to show that the decision is wrong. This view is against the general trend of decisions and cannot be accepted as correct.

There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether the decision in another case between the same parties after the date of the judgment sought to be reviewed would be a sufficient ground for review in cases where such decision if it had been given before the date the judgment sought to be reviewed, would have resulted in a different judgment. Before the date of the Privy Council decision in Kotagiri v. Vellanki[10-a] the Bombay High Court answered the question in the affirmative[11] while the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts answered it in the negative.[12] In Kotagiri's case it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the section of the old Code corresponding to this rule did not authorise the review of a decree which was right when it was made on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event. It has accordingly been held since then that a subsequent decision in another case[13] or the subsequent reversed of a decision on the basis of which a judgment was given is no ground for review under this rule.[13-a] There are, however, several decisions[14] which have purported to follow the Bombay view, but no reference was made in any of them to Kotagiri's case. In the undermentioned case[15] the High Court of Rangoon has further held that the Bombay view cannot be said to have been overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in Kotagiri's case and that it is still good law. The reasoning is, however, not very clear. It is submitted that these decisions cannot be accepted as laying down the correct law. The word "evidence," in this rule is not confined to documentary evidence but includes oral evidence.[16]

11. Discovery of important matter of law.—The words "new and important matter" in this rule refer to evidence or other matter in the nature of evidence, and not to a legal authority in existence at the date of the judgment but not brought to the notice of the Court.[1] Hence no review can be asked for on the ground of the discovery of new authorities which show that the decision is not correct.[2] The contrary view expressed in the cases cited below[3] is, it is submitted, not sound.

But the discovery of a former decision between the same parties which operates as res judicata is a discovery of new and important matter within this rule.[4]

The above view, it is submitted, is based on a sound principle. Because, if it were held that a party is entitled to apply for review on the ground of his discovery of fresh authorities, it would amount to saying that it is for a party to point out to the Court the law to be applied in a case, while the right view is that it is for the Court to find out and apply the correct law to the facts of a case whether the same is brought to its notice or not. See O 6, R 2, Note 2, Pt. (2). Further the language of this rule cannot appropriately be applied to a matter which, being a matter of law, a party is always presumed to know—See Holland's Jurisprudence 3rd Edn., Page 92

O. 47, R.1, Notes 12—13.

12. Exercise of due diligence.—In Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Railway[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—"Now the Code of Civil Procedure permits such applications for review on the ground of such discovery", (i.e., discovery of new and important matter or evidence) "but it enacts very strict conditions so as to prevent litigants lying on their oars when they ought to be looking for their evidence—it enjoins the Judge to require the facts as to the absence of negligence to be strictly proved". Applications for review on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence ought, therefore, to be refused when such evidence could have been produced if reasonable care and diligence had been exercised.[2] There must be strong evidence of diligence in getting all available evidence.[3] When the trial had lasted three years the Privy Council refused to admit fresh evidence as there was no reason shown as to why the new evidence was not timeously submitted.[4] The fact that evidence was found susbsequently cannot itself be taken to show that due diligence could not have been exercised; otherwise there could not be any case coming within this rule.[5] The grounds for granting a review on account of the discovery of fresh evidence, may in certain cases, be grounds for extending the time under S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[6]

13. "Was not within his knowledge and could not be produced by him at the time."—It must be shown that after the exercise of due diligence the evidence was not within the applicant's knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time.[1] The Court, in fact, has no power to grant a review without calling for strict proof of such allegations.[2] In the undermentioned case[3] the High Court of Patna has expressed the view that the words "or could not be produced by him at the time" must refer to the words "was not within his knowledge" and that the whole clause means that the new matters alleged were not within the applicant's knowledge and as such could not have been produced by him at the trial. In other words, it seems to be of the opinion that the availability of a piece of evidence within the knowledge of the applicant, but which, even after the exercise of due diligence, could not be produced by him at the trial, is not a ground for review. It is submitted that this view is against the language of this rule and cannot be accepted as correct.[4]

14. Decree rendered ineffectual by reversal.—See Note 10, supra.

15. Mistake or error on the face of the record.—In order that an error may be a ground for review it must be one apparent on the face of the record,[1] i.e., an evident error[2] which does not admit of extraneous matter to show its incorrectness.[3] The word "error" is not limited to errors of fact, but includes also errors of law.[4] But the law must be definite and capable of ascertainment.[5] An erroneous view of the law on a debatable point[6] or a wrong exposition of the law[7] or a wrong application of the law[8] cannot be considered a mistake or error on the face of the record.

A review has been held permissible in the following cases:—

Where the Court granted a claim for personal relief, a prayer for which could not on a proper construction of a doubtfully worded clause in the plaint, be made out, the error is not one apparent on the face of the record justifying a grant of review.[28] So also is the failure to give a formal finding on an issue tried and decided[29] or allowing the petitioner to prove fraud which was not pleaded.[30]

It was held in the undermentioned cases[31] that the fact that the Court had overlooked a previous ruling of the High Court on a point of law, may, be an error apparent on the face of the record. A contrary view has been taken in the cases noted below.[32] It is submitted that the latter view is correct. As was observed by the Madras High Court in Babu Vaidyan v. Murugesam Pillai[33] "it is difficult to see how an error can be said to exist on the face of the record where you have to travel outside the record to see if the judgment is correct or not."

Where the view of the law on which a judgment is based is subsequently overruled or modified by a superior Court, it cannot be a mistake or error on the face of the record.[34]

16. "Any other sufficient reason".—There has been a great diversity of judicial opinion as to the exact meaning of this expression, "any other sufficient reason." In Chajju Ram v. Neki[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council, after reviewing the case law declared that the expression should be interpreted as meaning a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. (See in this connection, Preamble Note 7, point 30). There is still a great diversity of opinion as to what is and what is not, a reason "analogous" to the reasons specified. According to the High Court of Rangoon, the word "analogous" is distinguishable from the expression "ejusdem generis" and the former word, as used by the Privy Council, is wider than the expression "ejusdem generis".[2] The want of uniformity in the decisions on this subject even after the Privy Council decision is apparently due to the fact that, in most cases, it is a matter for argument whether any reason is analogous to the reasons specifically mentioned in the rule.[3] The case-law bearing on the subject has been summarised in Notes 16-A and 16-B, infra.

16-A. Cases where review was allowed on ground of sufficient reason.—It has been held that a review can be granted in the following cases:—

(1) Where the decree or order has been passed under a misapprehension of the true state of circumstances.[1]

(5) Where the Court has proceeded on a wrong exposition of the law or has wrongly decided on a question of law.[4-a] See also Note 15, ante.

For other instances, see the following cases.[5]

17. Review on the ground of subsequent events.—As has been seen in Note 10, ante, the happening of a subsequent event is not a valid ground for review.[1] Thus a subsequent legislation altering the law,[2] or a subsequent admission of a party as to the matter litigated[3] is not a ground for review. Where a suit is decreed on condition of the plaintiff complying with certain requirements within a particular time and it is subsequently found that the period allowed by the decree is insufficient for the fulfilment of the conditions imposed, it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to review the judgment and enlarge the period.[4]

17-A. No review on ground of decision being erroneous on merits.—A review cannot be granted on the ground that the decision is erroneous on the merits, such a ground being appropriate for an appeal and not for an application for review.[1]

O. 47, R. 1, Notes 22—23.

22. Review petitions by minors.—A minor can apply for a review of a judgment passed against him on the ground that his guardian has conducted the case with gross negligence[1] or on the ground that no sanction had been obtained for a compromise entered into on his behalf by his guardian ad litem.[2] In all such applications he will be bound by the provisions of this rule.[3] There is no provision in the Code empowering the Court when passing a decree against a minor, to reserve to the minor the right of questioning the decree, after attaining majority, and the absence of such a provision is not a ground for review of the judgment otherwise properly passed.[4] (See also O 32, R. 3, Note 5 and O. 32, R. 7, Note 5.)

23. Consent decree.—Where facts are brought to the notice of the Court showing that a compromise ought to be treated as a nullity an application for review is a proper mode of raising the question whether the compromise should be treated as a nullity or not.[1] A compromise decree entered into by a vakil or agent might be set aside on the ground that the vakil or agent had no power.[2] There is conflict of opinion as to whether the discovery of fraud or undue influence in obtaining the consent decree can be a valid ground of review, some cases holding that it is[3] and some that it is not.[4] The true view, however, seems to be that in such cases a suit is the proper remedy in the generality of cases though motions for a new trial may be convenient in some cases.[5] An application for review may be made when the consent decree is sought to be impeached on the ground of clerical error or when it does not represent what the Court intended to decide.[6]

24. Ex parte decrees and orders of dismissal for default.—See also Notes 8 and 9 to O. 9, R. 13. The rule applies to all cases whether they are disposed of in the presence of the parties or ex parte in the absence of the defendants.[1] As to whether the fact that an application under O. 9, R. 13 could have been preferred and that it was barred on the date of the review application is a bar to review, see Note 9 to O. 9, R. 13. But an application to set aside an ex parte decree cannot by itself be treated as one for review.[2] A dismissal for default other than the failure to appear, is also open to review.[3] Where the dismissal is for default of appearance the failure to apply under O. 9, R. 9 or under O. 41, R. 19 will not, according to the High Courts of Madras, Calcutta and Lahore, bar an application for review,[4] though the reason for the failure to appear will not, of itself, amount to "sufficient cause" within the meaning of this rule and will not be a valid ground of review.[5] The High Court of Allahabad[5-a] and Patna[5-b] have taken a contrary view. It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that where an application for restoration is made and dismissed, an application for review thereafter will be barred.[6]

26. Review of decision before signing decree.—Where in order to be consistent in the decree finally passed, the Court has to pass orders under O. 41, R. 33 the same relief can be given in a petition put in by way of review.[1]

27. Commissioner cannot review.—A commissioner appointed for taking accounts may, in his discretion, and on proper grounds reopen the inquiry into any one or more of the items, before his report is made, for until then he decides nothing that is final and conclusive.[1]

28. Limitation.—The period of limitation for applications of review of judgments of Provincial Small Cause Courts, the High Courts in the exercise of their Original Civil Jurisdiction, and other Courts are respectively 15, 20 and 90 days from the date of the decree or order sought to be reviewed. (See Arts. 161, 162 and 173 of the Limitation Act, 1908.) In computing the period of limitation the applicant is entitled to deduct, under S. 12 of the Limitation Act, 1908, the time spent in obtaining a copy of the decree or order[1] though, as will be seen in Note 29, infra, such time cannot be excluded for the purposes of the Court-fee payable on the application. But he cannot exclude the time occupied by a previous application for review.[1-a] The Court may also under S. 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908, admit the application after the expiry of the period of limitation on sufficient cause being shown for not making the application within the prescribed period. No definite set of rules can be laid down to govern the discretion of a Court under S. 5 of the Limitation Act. It depends on the circumstances of each case.[2] The fact that an appeal is pending[3] or that the applicant is a minor[4] or that applicant's legal advisers were ignorant of the contents of a document in their possession at the time of the original hearing[5] or that a new exposition of the law has been made since the decision[6] is not a sufficient cause for excusing the delay in filing the application within time.

There is nothing in this order to suggest that the application for review must be within the same period which is allowed to a party for the alternative remedy by way of appeal or application for restoration of suit which has been dismissed for default of appearance.[7]

29. Court-fee.—An application for a review of a judgment of the trial Court if presented on or after the 90th day from the date of the decree is chargeable with the same fee as is leviable on the plaint. An application for review of an appellate judgment if presented on or after the 90th day from the date of the decree is similarly chargeable with the same fee as is leviable on the memorandum of appeal.[1] Such applications presented before the 90th day from the date of the original or appellate decree, as the case may be, are chargeable with one half of the fee leviable on the plaint or the memorandum of appeal. (See Articles 4 and 5 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act, 1870.) Under S. 14 of the said Act the Court may, even in a case where the application is presented on or after the 90th day, order the refund of so much of the fee paid on the application as exceeds the fee which would have been payable had it been presented before such day.[1-a] The fact that an application, filed actually beyond the 90 days, may be within the time for the purposes of limitation by virtue of the application of Ss. 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act, does not exempt the applicant from paying the full fee chargeable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal; the two Acts are not in pari materia.[2]

As to the fee payable where a portion of the judgment is sought to be reviewed, see the undermentioned cases.[3]

The word "judgment" in Articles 4 and 5 above referred to does not include an interlocutory order. Consequently an application for review of an interlocutory order is chargeable only like any other ordinary application.[4]

The presentation of an insufficiently stamped application for review is not a valid presentation.[5]

No Court-fee need be paid on an application for review presented in a suit in forma pauperis.[6] See O. 33, R. 8 of the Code. But the applicant must have been declared a pauper in the suit at the time of the application. Otherwise he would have to pay the full fee chargeable on the application under law.[7]

30. Appeal by one party—review application by another—Cl. (2).—The fact that an appeal has been preferred by one party does not preclude the other parties from applying for review[1] except where—

(1) the grounds of such appeal are common to the applicant and the appellant, or

(2) being a respondent he can present his case in the appellate Court.

The expression "where the ground of such appeal is common to the applicant and the appellant" means that the grounds of appeal and the grounds of review are the same. Where a party who has not appealed applies for review on the ground of discovery of new and important matter, after the appeal by another party is summarily dismissed, the ground of review is different from the grounds of appeal and therefore the application is maintainable.[2] Where the applicant has the opportunity to present his case before the appellate Court, the lower Court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the application.[3] A respondent in an appeal has the right to apply for review of appellate Court judgment.[4] the Judge who passed the decree or made the order has ordered notice to issue under rule 4, sub-rule (2) proviso (a), be disposed of by his successor.

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes.
2. Review by successor in office.

Applicability of the rule to Small Cause Courts. See Note 2, Pt. (21).

1. Legislative changes:—

There was no section in the Code of 1859 corresponding to this section. The cases decided under that Code[1] are now only of academic importance.

2. Review by successor in office.—This rule must be read as a proviso to R. 1.[1] The policy underlying the rule is that an application for review should be entertained and considered by the very Judge who made the decree or order.[2] Reading Rr. 1 and 2 as they ought to be, it follows that—

(1) every application for review on which notice has been ordered to issue by the Judge who passed the decree or made the order may be disposed of by his successor in office.[3]

(2) an application based on the ground of the discovery of new and important matter or evidence[4] or the existence of a clerical or arithmetical mistake or error apparent on the face of the record[5] can be entertained and disposed of by the successor in office. An application made both under O. 9, R. 13 and O. 47, R. 1 and registered as one under O. 47, R. 1, may,

however, be changed by the successor as one made under O. 9, R. 13 of the Code and disposed of on that basis.[6] A successor in office may also entertain applications for amendment of the decree under S. 152 of the Code.[7]

(3) an application based on any other ground than those referred to in the paragraph above can be entertained only by the Judge who made the order or passed the decree.[7-a] Thus a successor in office cannot grant a review of the decree or order passed by his predecessor in office on the ground that such decree or order is incorrect,[8] or on the ground that notice of hearing was not given,[9] or on the ground that the guardian ad litem of a minor party had no sanction to refer the matter to arbitration[10] or on the ground that the case was wrongly dismissed by his predecessor for default[11] or on the ground that the right to proceed against other properties was not reserved by the original Judge.[12] It will be illegal for a District Judge to transfer a review petition filed before a Subordinate Judge to his own file,[13] or to transfer an application for review filed before him to a Subordinate Judge.[14] A successor in office of a Judge who has been transferred[15] or who has retired,[16] or who is dead[17] cannot entertain such application for review. Similarly, where a Court has been abolished and suits have been transferred to another Court the Judge of that Court cannot grant a review except on the two grounds mentioned in this rule.[18] But where a Judge of an Additional Sub-Court was transferred

(4) an application for review of a decree or order passed by a Judge of the High Court can be made to, or disposed of by, his successor in office.[20] This rule has no application to the High Court.

The rule has no application to Courts of Small causes.[21] See O. 50, infra.

2. Form, contents and presentation of application.—Applications for review should be drawn up in the same manner as appeals and should set forth concisely the grounds of objections to the decision of which a review is sought, without argument or narrative and such grounds should be numbered consecutively.[1] The Court should not travel beyond the grounds mentioned in the application.[1-a] According to the High Court of Allahabad, it is not necessary that it should be accompanied by the copy of the decree, order or judgment sought to be reviewed,[2] while, according to the High Court of Bombay it is necessary to do so.[3] The application should be presented to the Judge and not to the Munsarium.[4] The informalities in presenting a review petition cannot be raised after the decree is passed in terms of review.[5]

The rule only relates to the form of the application for review. It does not extend the right of a party who goes for a review, and give him a right of appeal against an order refusing to restore an application for review, by reason of the fact that an appellate order under such circumstances is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (t).[6] An application for execution made after 90 days from the date of the decree and which does not mention any circumstances to show why it could not be made within 90 days, cannot be treated as an application for review.[7]

3. Application by Legal representative of party.—The legal representative of a deceased party to a suit can apply for a review in the circumstances in which the party himself could have applied.[1]

4. Limitation.—Time requisite for a copy of the judgment, order or decree cannot be deducted in computing the period of limitation for applying for review.[1] A pauper may apply for review of judgment with the same indulgence under S. 5 of the Limitation Act as to delay in making the application as a person who is not a pauper.[2] The time occupied in prosecuting a prior application for review cannot be deducted in calculating the period of limitation.[3] Nor the time taken in prosecuting an appeal.[4]

1. Legislative changes:—

(a) The words "and the Judge shall record with his own hand his reasons for such opinion" which occurred in the concluding part of para. 2 of the old section have been omitted.

(b) Cl. (c) of the old section has been transferred to R. 2 of this Order.

The other alterations do not involve any alteration in the Law.

By reason of the change mentioned in (a) above the decisions mentioned below have been rendered obsolete.[1]

2. "Where the Court is of opinion . . . . it shall grant the same".—Where an application for review is made on any of the grounds specified in R. 1 and the Court is of opinion that the review should be granted, it should be granted.[1] It is improper, to admit a review petition and hear the case afresh, and thereafter dismiss the petition; where, at the re-hearing, the Court comes to the conclusion that there is no reason to interfere, the proper course is not to pass an order dismissing the review application but to pass an order to the same effect as the one under review.[2]

3. Review without notice to the opposite party.—Before granting an application for review it is necessary that notice of the application should be given to the opposite party. Otherwise the order granting review will be a nullity.[1] A notice of an application by the plaintiff for review of an order passed in a suit must be served on all the defendants and not merely on the opposing defendants who had appeared when the decree or order sought to be reviewed was passed.[2] The reason is that the expression "opposite party" in proviso (a) of the rule is not restricted to cases in which such party has actually appeared. It includes all parties interested in supporting the order or decree sought to be set aside.[3] There is a difference of opinion as to whether where an appeal is dismissed under O. 41, R. 11 or a suit is dismissed before summons to the defendant, or an application for execution is summarily dismissed before notice to the judgment-debtor, the respondent defendant, or judgment-debtor as the case may be, is an "opposite party" within the meaning of this rule. The High Courts of Madras[4] and Patna[5] have held that he is, while the High Courts of Calcutta[6] and Lahore[7] have held that he is not.

Court grants a review without calling for strict proof of the allegation that the new matter was not within the knowledge of the petitioner, the order is in contravention of this rule and is without jurisdiction.[2] "Strict proof" means anything which may serve directly or indirectly to convince a Court, and has been brought before the Court in legal form and in compliance with the law of evidence. It is the formality of the proof which is prescribed and not the sufficiency in the result. Hence, the fact that the evidence adduced is not sufficient to prove the allegation does not make the order granting an application for review one in contravention of the provisions of this rule within the meaning of R. 7, infra.[3] It is within the jurisdiction of the appellate Court to say whether the strict proof is according to law or not[4] though the question of the sufficiency or importance of evidence is for the Court admitting the review.[5]

In R. 5, for the word "six" the word "two" shall be substituted.

Synopsis.

1. Application for review in Court consisting of two or more Judges.
2. "Attached to the Court."

Review by two Judges, one of whom is new. See Note 1, Pt. (1).

1. Application for review in Court consisting of two or more Judges.—This rule applies to High Court also. It is not applicable to Small Cause Courts. See O. 50. A review heard and granted by two Judges of a Court one of whom only was the Judge who passed the decree, is illegal.[1] Similarly where one Judge of a Bench of two Judges who disposed of an appeal leaves the Court on a month's leave, the other Judge has no jurisdiction to hear an application for review since the former Judge cannot be said to have ceased to be a member of the Court or to be precluded by absence or other cause for a period of six months next after the application for review.[2] But where a Bench of two Judges of a Court has passed a decree or made an order and one of the Judges is absent on leave thus precluding him from considering the decree or order for a period of six months from the date of the application for review, the other Judge is competent to hear the application for review.[3] If a review is allowed by such single Judge, the matter should be reheard by a Bench of two Judges.[4] A District Judge cannot transfer an application for review to the Additional Judge.[5]

2. "Attached to the Court".—A Judge who is absent on leave and for whom another is officiating, is not "attached to the Court" and the review application may be disposed of by the remaining Judge who heard the appeal originally.[1]

Applicability to Small Cause Courts. See Note 2, Pt. (2).

1. Legislative changes:—

1. In sub-R. (1), the word "first" which occurred in the old section has been substituted by the words "shall not be appealable".
2. The word "shall" in sub-R. (2) has been inserted in the place of the word "may" which occurred in the old section.
3. The last para. of S. 629 has been detached from this rule and reproduced in a modified form as R. 9 of this Order. The other changes do not involve any change in the law.

Under S. 378 of the Code of 1859 the order of the Court granting or refusing the review was final.

2. Scope and applicability of the rule.—Under this rule an order rejecting an application for review is not appealable. An order granting an application for review is appealable only on three grounds of objections, namely, that the application was—

(a) in contravention of the provisions of R. 2,

(b) in contravention of the provisions of R. 4,

(c) presented after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefore and without sufficient cause,

Such objection may be taken—

(a) at once by an appeal from the order granting the application [O. 43, R. 1 (w)], or

(b) in an appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit (S. 105).[1]

Where an application is dismissed for default of appearance it may be restored on sufficient cause being shown for such non-appearance, upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as the Court thinks fit and shall appoint a day for hearing the same. But no order of restoration should be made without notice to the opposite party.

This rule being inconsistent with S. 176 of the Agra Tenancy Act is not applicable to an order passed by an Assistant Collector, Second class, relating to the trial of any suit or application.[1-a] This rule does not apply to the Provincial Small Cause Courts.[2] Where the Court actually granted a review though it purported to act under S. 152, it was held in the undermentioned case[3] that it must be treated as an order under this order and that an appeal lay against the order.

3. Order rejecting review not appealable.—An order rejecting an application for review is not appealable.[1] As to whether and when a revision will lie in such a case, see Note 27 to S. 115 and the undermentioned cases.[2] As to whether an order rejecting an application for review of judgment is an order made "on appeal" from which an appeal lies to the Privy Council, see Note 5 to S. 109 and the cases cited below.[3] As to the powers of revision under S. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act, see the case cited below.[4]

4. Order granting review if and when appealable.—Under the Code of 1859 there was no appeal even against an order granting a review.[1] O. 43, R. 1 (w) gives a right of appeal against such an order.[1-a] This rule enacts that in such an appeal only the three grounds of objections specified in this rule can be raised. Both the rules must be read together[2] and so reading them it follows, that there is no appeal even from an order granting a review in cases other than those specified in this rule.[3] Thus where a Court grants

a review for sufficient reason the order is not open to appeal.[4] In Bombay O. 43, R. 1 (w) has been deleted by a rule made by the High Court under S. 122 of the Code. In Bombay therefore an order granting a review is in any view appealable, only if it falls under this rule.[4-a]

Where a decree passed on review cannot be attacked on a ground recognised under this rule the case cannot be certified as a fit case under S. 109, Cl. (c) of the Code[5]; nor will the mere fact that an appeal is permitted under this rule make it a fit case for appeal to his Majesty in Council.[6]

O. 47, R. 7, Notes 4—8.

It is open to the appellant to prefer an appeal against an order granting a review, without taking any steps regarding the decree itself.[7]

As to an appeal from an order granting a review in suits of a Small Cause nature, see Note 19 to S. 102 and the undermentioned cases.[8]

An appeal will lie also from an order granting a review of an order passed in execution proceedings.[9]

5. Grounds of objection in appeal.—See Note 4, above

6. Application being in contravention of R. 2.—An appeal will lie from an order granting a review on the ground that there is a contravention of R. 2.[1] A, a District Judge passed an order dismissing an appeal. While A was absent, an application for review of the order was presented to the Sub-Judge who ordered notice to issue. Subsequently A, died and his successor granted a review of the order of dismissal. It was held that the Sub-Judge had no jurisdiction to order notice to issue on the application for review, and that an order by the successor of A, granting a review of A's order, was, under such circumstances, in contravention of the provisions of R. 2, and an appeal therefore lay under this rule.[2]

7. "In contravention of the provisions of R. 4."—It has been seen in Note 6 to R. 4, ante that where a Court grants a review without notice to the opposite party or, in cases coming under Cl. (b) of sub-R. (2) of that rule, without calling for strict proof of the allegations referred to therein, it acts in contravention of that rule. An appeal will therefore lie from such order under the provisions of this rule.[1] As to the meaning of the words "strict proof" and to the powers of the appellate Court to go into the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, see Note 6 to R. 4, ante.

8. "After the expiry of the period of limitation".— An appellate Court cannot entertain an appeal from an order granting review simply on the ground that the application was time-barred. There must also be want of sufficient cause for the delay.[1] When an application made beyond the prescribed period is admitted without the Court satisfying itself that there is sufficient cause for delay, then the Court acts without jurisdiction.[2] The appellate Court can look into the sufficiency of the cause for the delay, alleged.[3]

9. Second appeal from order granting review.—No second appeal lies from the order of an appellate Court, whether it confirms or reverses the order of the Court of first instance granting an application for review.[1] See S. 104, sub-S. (2).

10. Letters Patent appeal.—An order refusing an application for review is not a judgment "within the meaning of S. 15 of the Letters Patent and is not appealable as such.[1] An order granting an application for review may amount to a "judgment" within that clause but an appeal will lie on the grounds specified in this rule.[2]

Where a single Judge disposed of an application for review, when the other Judge was on a month's leave it was held that the order was without jurisdiction and that an appeal lay under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.[3]

11. Objection to order granting review may be taken in appeal from the final decree.—The propriety of an order granting review can also be questioned in the appeal against the final decree but only on the grounds specified in this rule.[1]

12. Order granting review in insolvency proceedings if appealable.—A Court exercising powers under the insolvency jurisdiction has the same powers as any other Court under the Code. If a review is granted, the order can be objected to in appeal only on the grounds mentioned in this rule.[1]

13. Dismissal of application for review for default—No appeal.—An order under O. 47, R. 7 refusing to re-admit an application for review, dismissed for default is not an appealable order. However, the High Court could in such a case interfere in revision.[1]

14. Appeal from decree passed on review.—An appeal lies against the decree passed on review.[1] (See also Note 3 to R. 8.)

In such appeal the Court has full power to go into the merits of the case and see whether the decree was properly passed.[2] It could be urged in such an appeal that the Court which admitted the application for review had no jurisdiction to do so.[3]

15. Second application for review.—There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure preventing a second application for review, where a previous application for review was made and rejected, provided such second application is based on grounds different from those taken in the first application.[1]

16. Review without jurisdiction—Revision.—The High Court will not interfere with the order of an appellate Court dismissing an appeal against the grant of review unless there is a want of jurisdiction or there is an illegality or material irregularity in passing such an order[1] nor will it Registry of application granted, and order for re hearing.

R. 8. [S. 630.] When an application for review is granted, a note thereof shall be made in the register and the Court may at once re-hear the case or make such order in regard to the re-hearing as it thinks fit.

Synopsis.

1. Procedure on review.
2. What question may be gone into after the grant of review.
3. Effect of review on the original decree.

1. Procedure on review.—The rule applies to High Courts and Small Cause Courts. There are three stages in the proceedings for review[1]:—

(1) An ex parte application and notice thereon.

(2) The hearing of the application after such notice.

(3) Rehearing of the case after granting the application for review.

This rule refers to the procedure to be followed when an order granting a review is passed. The Court ought to make a record of the fact that the review has been granted.[2] The Court can thereafter proceed to hear the case at once[3] or may make such order as to rehearing as it thinks fit. This is clear from the rule itself.

2. What question may be gone into after the grant of review.—A Court, in granting a review, can make a qualified order as to the extent to which the review should be carried out.[1] It is not bound to hear the whole case.[2] Nor, on the other hand, is it restricted to the particular ground on which the application was granted.[3] It depends upon the circumstances of each case whether the whole suit should be re-opened or whether it should be retried in part only.[4] When, on a review application, an order dismissing an appeal under O. 41, R. 11, is set aside, the whole appeal may be heard.[4-a] But grounds not mentioned in the memo. of appeal cannot be heard.[5] A party who not only had an opportunity of raising a question but who did raise it in appeal and in the argument abandoned it, cannot be allowed to agitate the question again on review.[6] The Court has a discretion to receive at the hearing after review, documents which had not been tendered at the original hearing.[7] But where a party obtained review on the ground that upon the record he was entitled to full relief he sought, the other side cannot be allowed to adduce evidence.[8] Whether certain documents which have been admitted as evidence were so admissible or not, is not a point which can be argued on review.[9]

3. Effect of review on the original decree.—Where an application for review is rejected, the original decree stands.[1] Where an application for re-

O. 48, R. 1, Note 1.

1. Process to be served at the expense of the party applying.— Ordinarily a party applying for a process on his behalf should pay for the expenses thereof. But the Court has power, under special circumstances, to direct that any other party shall bear the expenses.[1] But the words "unless the Court otherwise directs" should not be construed as giving the Court any power to remit the fees leviable under the Court Fees Act.[2] The Court should under Cl. 2 of the rule fix a time for the payment of process fee; and it is only in default of payment within such time that it can dismiss the suit for default. Where no such time is fixed in the order, a dismissal for non-payment of process fees is not proper.[3] The time that a Court fixes for payment must be such as to give reasonable facilities to a litigant to obey such order and thus enable him to get the aid of the Court in the matter of summoning his witnesses; an order to pay process at once is against the spirit of the rule.[4]

This rule which applies to payment of process fees does not apply to filing of the process forms in the manner provided by the High Court Rules, and no time need be given for the same.[5] See also S. 143, ante.

Who may serve processes of High Courts.

R. 1. [See Ss. 116 to 120 and Ss. 121 to 131.]

Para. 1, Note 2.

2. Scope of the schedule.—The law of arbitration in British India is to be found in this Code and in the Arbitration Act, 1899. The Code deals both with arbitrations pending litigation, and with arbitrations without recourse to litigation. The Arbitration Act, on the other hand, applies only to arbitrations by agreement without the intervention of the Court of justice, and only in cases where, if the subject-matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit, the suit could be instituted in a Presidency Town or other local area to which the Act is made applicable by the Local Government. Where the Act applies, paragraphs 17 to 23 of the second schedule (dealing with references to arbitration without the intervention of the Court) do not apply.[1]

The Act was passed to remedy two defects that were supposed to exist in the provisions as to arbitration enacted in the old Code, viz.:—

(1) That the Code did not apply to cases where the dispute which was the subject of reference did not arise at the date of the agreement to refer. In other words where an agreement was entered into to settle differences that may arise in future by arbitration, and a dispute subsequently arose between the parties, the agreement to refer could not be filed in Court under the provisions of the Code.

(2) That the Code applied only to cases where the agreement to refer named the arbitrator or stated that he should be appointed by the Court.

The first of these defects was, however, removed by a Full Bench decision of the High Court of Bombay in Fazulbhoy Mehral Chinoy v. The Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company, Ltd.,[1-a] in which it was held that on a correct interpretation of the Code, it applied also to agreements to refer future disputes to arbitration. The second defect also has now been removed by the omission from Paragraph 17 of this schedule the provisions requiring the arbitrator to be named. At present, therefore, there is no material difference between the provisions of the Code and those of the Arbitration Act as regards references without the intervention of the Court, except that the latter applies to particular local areas, and the former applies to other parts of British India.

In Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan,[1-b] their Lordships of the Privy Council had occasion to consider the true construction and effect of the provisions of the Code relating to arbitration and they observed that those provisions deal with arbitrations under three heads:—

(1) Where the parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit. In that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court. (Paragraphs 1 to 16 deal with such matters.)

(2) Where the parties, without recourse to litigation, agree to refer their differences to arbitration and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court. In that case, all further proceedings are under the supervision of the Court. (Paragraphs 17 to 19 of the schedule deal with such matters.)

(3) Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court, and the assistance of the Court is only sought to give effect to the award. (Paragraphs 20 to 23 of the schedule deal with these matters.)

3. Applicability of the Schedule to insolvency proceedings.—The provisions of this schedule do not apply to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 by virtue of S. 5 of that Act. An Insolvency Court has therefore no power to refer the whole proceedings to arbitrators to decide whether the petitioner for insolvency or (in the case of a petition by a creditor) the debtor, should or should not be declared an insolvent. The proceedings require the exercise of judicial discretion and it would be acting contrary to the whole spirit of the Act for a Court which has special jurisdiction thereunder, to delegate its powers and duties to the arbitrator.[1]

4. Applicability of the Schedule to execution proceedings.—This Schedule does not apply to execution proceedings and a Court executing a decree cannot refer the matter in the execution proceedings to arbitration.[1]

5. Applicability of the Schedule to probate proceedings.—A dispute relating to the genuineness of a will in a probate proceeding pending before Court cannot be referred to arbitration.[1] So also an application for revocation of the grant of a probate cannot be referred to arbitration.[2] This is based on the view that a decision on such questions is not merely one inter partes but is a judgment in rem against the whole world and therefore cannot be allowed to be decided by arbitrators selected at the instance of merely the parties to the proceeding.

6. Applicability of the Schedule to suits for restitution of conjugal rights.—The factum or validity of a marriage, may in a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights be referred to arbitration[1] but the whole suit cannot be referred to arbitration inasmuch as the question whether a decree for restitution should be made or not is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court and cannot be delegated to arbitrators.[2]

6-A. Arbitration in proceedings under other Acts.—1. Section 52 of the Bengal Estates' Partition Act (V of 1897) provides that when a partition has been referred to arbitration, the proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of Paragraphs 1 to 16 of this Schedule so far as they are applicable.

2. The provision of this Code relating to arbitration have been made applicable, by S. 265, sub-S. (3) of the Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), to all suits, appeals and proceedings under that Act before the Deputy Commissioner, so far as they may apply.

3. Under S. 43 of the Bengal Survey Act (V of 1875) and S. 16 of the Burma Boundaries Act (V of 1880), the Collector or the Boundary Officer may, with the consent of the parties concerned refer to arbitration any dispute as to a boundary.

4. In cases of reference to arbitration under S. 203 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) the provisions of Paragraphs 2 to 16 of this Schedule shall apply so far as they are not inconsistent with anything in that Act. (See S. 204 of the Act.)

7. All parties interested must agree to reference.—The agreement to refer the matter in dispute in a pending suit must have the concurrence of all the parties concerned.[1] In other words the foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court to make an order of reference is an agreement between all the persons interested.[2] An order of reference made by the Court where all the parties interested have not agreed, is thus without jurisdiction and invalid[3] not only against the absent party, but against all parties, i.e., even those who have joined in the reference.[3-a] A subsequent consent by one of the parties who did not join in the reference at the time it was made cannot make the proceedings valid and an award made on such reference is void and need not be set aside.[4] An objection to the validity of the reference on the ground of the non-agreement of all the parties can be raised at any stage.[5] The decision cited below[6] where it was held that a party may be estopped by his conduct from contesting a reference to which he was no party, cannot be accepted on principle as correct.

It is however, only the parties interested that should agree to the reference. Section 506 of the old Code provided that all the parties to the suit may apply for a reference to arbitration. But it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that the words "all the parties to a suit" would not necessarily include parties between whom and any of the parties to the submission there was, in fact, no matter in difference in the suit.[7] The word "interested" was added in the present Code to give effect to the above view.[8]

The expression "all parties interested" means parties interested in the specific dispute referred to arbitration and not in the subject-matter of the whole suit.[9] Where parties have distinct and severable interests, a party interested only in one such portion need not join in a reference with respect to the other portions.[10]

The question whether a party is interested within the meaning of this paragraph depends upon the facts of each case.[11] One important test is to see whether he is a necessary party or a person who could be joined as a proper party under the provisions of O. 1, R. 10 of the Code.[12] An unnecessary or pro forma party,[13] or a party who had been exonerated at the time of the reference[14] cannot be said to be a person interested within the meaning of the paragraph. A person who is ex parte in the suit[15] or even a person against whom no relief is claimed[16] is not necessarily a person not interested. Whether he is so interested or not depends upon the facts of the particular case[17] including the conduct of the party up to the end of the proceedings.[18] But the mere fact that the award that was passed is not in fact against him cannot be taken to show that he was not interested at the time of the reference.[18-a] Where there is in fact no matter in difference between the ex parte defendant and the parties to the submission, his not joining the reference will not affect the validity of the reference.[19] If on the other hand he is interested and does not agree to the reference, the order of reference is ultra vires and invalid.[20]

A defendant who makes a complete admission of the plaintiff's claim entitling the latter to a judgment under O. 12, R. 6 of the Code, is no longer interested and need not join in the reference by the plaintiff and the other defendants.[21]

8. All the parties, if should apply.—All the parties interested must not only agree to the reference, but must apply to the Court. If before the application is made to the Court one of the parties resiled from the agreement, no order of reference can be passed on the ground that he previously agreed to a reference being made before the application was presented.[1]

9. Effect of omission to sign or verify the application.—See Note 21, infra.

10. Matter in difference.—The matter in difference is the matter in dispute between the parties.[1] A dispute implies an assertion of a right by one party and the repudiation thereof by another.[2] It is not however necessary that the question should be one which the Court can legally enquire into. Thus a dispute as to an uncertified payment or adjustment, which the Court cannot take notice of, can be a matter in difference between the parties which can be referred to arbitration.[3]

Para. 1, Note 10.

The matter in difference must be one which has actually arisen at the time of the reference though it need not have arisen at the time of the agreement to refer.[4] There can be no reference to arbitration under this schedule of existing differences as well as disputes that may arise in the future.[5] A dispute may exist even where the liability is fully admitted and only the payment is withheld. The facts of each case must be examined to see whether there is a dispute.[6]

Further, the matter in difference must be one arising in the suit and between the parties to the suit. The Court has no power to refer to arbitration any questions between the parties to the suit other than those in question in the suit, or any questions in which any person, not a party to the suit is concerned.[7]

A reference is competent on a question of law as well as a question of fact.[8] Consequently, an error made by the arbitrators on a point of law referred to them does not vitiate the award and cannot be questioned on the ground that it is not in accordance with the received interpretation of the law[9] but the matter in difference must relate only to the private rights of the parties to the litigation. A suit under S. 92 of the Code is not one for the determination of the private rights of the parties to the litigation, and matters in such a suit cannot be referred to arbitration.[10] Similarly the selection of a guardian for a minor in a proceeding under the Guardian and Wards Act 1890 is not a matter of private interest and cannot be settled by reference to arbitration.[11] It has been held that a criminal complaint cannot be referred to arbitration.[12]

Where a question arises as to what the matter was that was referred to arbitration, it is for the Court to say on a construction of the reference. The arbitrator's belief about it is immaterial.[13] Where a whole case is referred to arbitration the question of costs also must be taken to have been referred and the arbitrators can give a decision thereon.[14] (See also paragraph 13 below.)

11. Reference in respect of matters outside suit.—Matters outside the suit cannot be referred to arbitration under this paragraph and the award made on such a reference is invalid.[1] An agreement to recognise an award on matters beyond the scope of the disputes mentioned in the reference is void.[2] Where, however, an application for reference includes matters outside the suit but the Court orders a reference only as to matters in difference in the suit the order of reference is not illegal.[3] Again where on the same day parties apply for reference to arbitration of matters in difference between them in the suit and also separately make a reference as to matters outside the suit the order of reference made by the Court with regard to the subject-matter of the suit cannot be questioned on the ground of illegality or invalidity.[4]

12. Application shall be in writing.—See Note 21, below.

13. At any time before judgment is pronounced.—The parties are entitled to have the matter in difference between them submitted to arbitration, at any time before judgment is pronounced. The Court has no discretion to reject the application made by the parties for a reference to arbitration.[1]

14. Revocation of submission.—Where an order of reference to arbitration is made through Court, all subsequent proceedings are, as has been seen in Note 2 above, under the supervision of the Court. Consequently a party to the agreement to refer is not entitled to terminate the reference by any revocation on his part. He is bound by it and the arbitration must proceed according to the provisions of the law.[1] The Court may, however, supersede the arbitration on the application of the parties in the cases specified in paragraphs 5 and 8 of the schedule. There is a conflict of opinion whether even the Court can revoke the arbitration in cases not falling within the said paragraphs. According to the decisions cited below[2] the Court has no power to deal with the matter in difference between the parties until the award is made. Thus the Court could not even allow the withdrawal of the suit after an order of reference has been made, though if there is any partiality or misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, the Court could, after the award is made, set it aside.[3] The High Court of Allahabad has, on the other hand in a recent case[4] held that there is an inherent jurisdiction to intervene and supersede the arbitration in cases not falling within paragraphs 5 and 8 where such an order is necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court. The High Court of Patna has also taken a similar view.[4-a]

Where an agreement to refer has been entered into without recourse to litigation it may be filed in Court under paragraph 17 where no sufficient cause is shown against its being filed. On an interpretation of S. 326 of the Code of 1859 corresponding to paragraph 17 of this Schedule it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pestonji Nusserwanjee v. D. Maneckjee and Co., 12 Moore's Indian Appeals 112, that where parties have agreed to submit the matter in difference between them to arbitration of one or more certain specified persons, no party to submission can revoke the submission to arbitration unless for good cause, and that a mere arbitrary revocation of the authority is not permitted. And this has been followed in numerous cases. See notes to paragraph 17, infra. In cases falling within the Arbitration Act, 1899, a submission to arbitration may be revoked by leave of the Court. As to the circumstances under which such leave may be given see the undermentioned cases.[5]

15.—Withdrawal of suit after reference to arbitration.—As has been seen in Note 14 above, the Court has no jurisdiction to allow a withdrawal of the suit after reference[1] or after an award has been made on such reference.[2] An application to file an award under paragraph 20 of the Code, can however be allowed to be withdrawn as if it were a suit.[3]

16. "Court"—Appellate Court.—As has been seen in Note 8 to O. 41, R. 25, ante where the appellate Court remits a case under that rule, the lower Court has no power to refer the case for arbitration.[1] Nor can the appellate Court, by its order of remand direct the lower Court to do so.[2]

By virtue of sub-S. (2) of S. 107, ante the appellate Court has the same powers of acting under this Schedule as the Court of first instance. Thus the appellate Court can refer, with the consent of parties, matters in dispute in appeal to arbitration.[3] Where the Court of first instance passes a decree not in accordance with the award, but the appellate Court holding that the award is not open to any objections passes a decree in accordance with this award, it is final under paragraph 16 of the Schedule.[4]

17. Death of party, if operates as revocation of reference.—Under the English Common Law, the death of a party to a reference operates as a revocation of the authority of the arbitrator, unless the submission contained either expressly or by necessary implication a provision to the contrary. This view proceeded on the principle that an arbitrator was, in the contemplation of the law, merely an agent appointed by the parties to decide the matter in dispute between them.[1] The law in this country is however, quite the reverse, and the death of a party pending arbitration proceedings through Court does not necessarily revoke the reference.[2] If on the death of the party the right to sue survives to his representatives, they should be brought on record under the provisions of O. 22.[3] Where no application is made within time for bringing the legal representatives on the record, and the suit abates, the award made by the arbitrators subsequent thereto cannot be filed in Court.[4]

In a proceeding before the arbitrator on a reference made without the intervention of the Court, there is no provision of law enabling the arbitrator to bring the legal representatives of a deceased party to the submission on record, and the fact that the arbitrator failed to do so does not make the award illegal and not binding on the representatives[5] especially where the party dies after the hearing is terminated and nothing remains for the arbitrators to do but to deliver their award.[6]

18. Authority of pleader to refer.—Section 506 of the old Code required a special authority for a pleader to make a reference to arbitration on behalf of his client.[1] In the present paragraph the words as to special authority have been omitted. It has been held by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court that the effect of the omission is to enable a pleader to make a reference to arbitration even though the vakalatnama does not specifically authorise him to do so.[2] The general trend of opinion is, however that a pleader has no such authority.[3] A counsel as distinguished from a pleader who derives his authority only from the vakalatnama, has implied authority even to make a reference to arbitration.[4] But neither a counsel nor a pleader expressly authorised to refer to arbitration can delegate his power to refer to arbitration to another pleader without express authorisation to that effect.[5] Nor will the reference to arbitration by the counsel of a party be binding on the party where he had given the counsel express instructions against making any such reference.[6] A pleader has no authority to revoke the appointment of an arbitrator by the party himself, without the latter's knowledge or instructions.[7]

19. Authority of agent to refer.—The authorised agent of a party within the meaning of O. 3, Rr. 1 and 2 can make a reference on behalf of his principal.[1] No special power of authorisation is, however, necessary to enable him to do so.[2] The principal can also subsequently ratify the agent's act in referring to arbitration, even where the agent had originally no authority to do so.[3] A partner is an agent of the firm only for the purpose of the business of the firm.[4] It is not part of the business of the firm to refer matters in dispute to arbitration and therefore one partner cannot, as such, make or authorise a reference to arbitration on behalf of the firm.[5] But the managing partner of the firm can validly make a reference to arbitration so as to bind the firm.[6]

20. Authority of guardian or manager of a joint Hindu family.—The next friend or natural guardian of a minor is entitled to refer disputes to arbitration, where there is no pending suit in respect of it, if the same is for the benefit of the minor, and the award passed on such a reference will be binding on the minor.[1] As to the powers of a guardian ad litem to agree to refer the subject-matter of the suit to arbitration, see Note 15 to O. 32, R. 7 and the undermentioned case.[2] The manager of a joint Hindu family represents the other members of the family and can refer the family disputes to arbitration.[3]

21. Form.—The agreement to refer should clearly set forth in the form of issues, what are the matters in difference between the parties on which the arbitrator is required to arbitrate.[1] If the agreement is so vague as to make it impossible to ascertain what the dispute was which was referred to arbitration, it is bad for indefiniteness.[2] The paragraph requires that the agreement to refer shall be in writing. Where there is no written reference and there is nothing to show what the parties agreed to refer, the reference and the award will be invalid.[3] But the provision as to the requirement of writing is only directory and not mandatory, the object thereof being merely to avoid a subsequent controversy as to whether there was or was not any such application.[4] An award is not therefore invalid merely because it was not made in writing if it is clear that the parties did agree to refer.[5] In the undermentioned case[6] an application for an adjournment on the ground that the parties had referred the dispute to arbitration was assumed to be an application for an order of reference. It was however held in the case cited below[7] that the requirement as to writing cannot be said to be directory but that nevertheless the parties were estopped from defeating the arbitration proceedings on the ground of non-compliance with the paragraph. The High Court of Bombay has also held that want of writing undermines the foundation of jurisdiction but that it is not sufficient by itself, to set aside the award.[8] These two cases cannot, it is submitted, be accepted as correct on principle. The breach of a mandatory provision or the want of jurisdiction will render the proceedings void and there can be no question of estoppel.

Where the parties have agreed and applied to the Court for a reference, the mere fact that one of them has not signed the application does not vitiate the reference.[9] Where the pleader of a party duly authorised signs the reference the fact that the party himself does not sign it will not invalidate the award.[10] It was held by the Privy Council in the undermentioned case[11] that where the guardian ad litem of a minor party is present in Court and assents to the application for reference, the fact that he did not sign the reference did not render it invalid.

22. Agreement to abide by the decision of the Court.—A consent by the parties to abide by the decision of the Court is not such a reference to arbitration as is contemplated by this schedule.[1] But the award of the Court is binding on the parties not because of the fact that this schedule applies but because on general principles of jurisprudence parties cannot go back on their consent to abide by the decision of the Court after such decision is given.[2]

Para. 2, Notes 1—2.

Synopsis.

1 Appointment of arbitrator.
2. Appointment of Court itself as arbitrator—See Note 22 to paragraph 1 above.

1. Appointment of arbitrator.—It is essential that the parties should either name the arbitrators or consent to the nomination of the arbitrators by the Court. The Court has no authority to force upon a reluctant party the decision of any question in the cause by arbitrators selected at its discretion.[1] A party may, however, waive such an irregularity; but if he appears before the arbitrator under protest, he cannot be held to have forfeited his right to question the validity of the proceedings.[2]

Before the Court refers a case to arbitration it should ascertain whether the persons nominated are willing to accept the office, and till then it cannot make a reference.[3]

2. Appointment of Court itself as arbitrator.—See Note 22 to paragraph 1 above.

Para. 3, Note 1.

Order of reference.

P. 3. [S. 508.] (1) The Court shall, by order, refer to the arbitrator, the matter in difference which he is required to determine, and shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award, and shall specify such time in the order.

(2) Where a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in this schedule, deal with such matter in the same suit.

Para. 3, Notes 2—5.

2. "The Court shall, by order, refer."—As has been seen in Note 13 to paragraph 1 ante, where the parties apply to the Court for an order of reference, the Court is bound to make an order of reference and has no discretion in the matter. In the absence of an order of reference by the Court under this Paragraph, the arbitration proceedings and the award made therein are illegal.[1] Where the parties applied for adjournment of the suit from time to time on the ground that the matters in dispute had been referred to arbitration and the Court granted time, it was held that the order granting adjournment on the application of the parties should under the circumstances of the case be construed as an order of reference.[2]

3. Revocation or withdrawal from arbitration.—See Notes 14, 15 and 17 to Paragraph 1, ante.

4. "Matter in difference".—See Note 10 to Paragraph 1. Where it is found that one matter in difference agreed to be referred, has been omitted from the reference and that consequently the arbitrators have not given any decision thereon, the party interested should bring the omission to the notice of the Court so that the Court may send the case back to the arbitrators with a fresh reference on the point omitted. If he does not do so, the Court is not wrong in deciding the point itself.[1] The decision of the arbitrators on matters not in dispute, nor referred to them is null and void for want of jurisdiction.[2]

5. "Shall fix such time as it considers reasonable".—These words are mandatory and imperative and the Court is bound to fix in its order of reference, a time for the making of the award.[1] This fixing of a limit of time is, in fact, the "pillar" and "pivot" of the scheme of this schedule, enabling the Court to have control over the arbitrators, and the power cannot be delegated to the arbitrators themselves.[2] But where the order of reference does fix a time but describes it as one fixed for the hearing of the suit instead of for making the award, there is only an irregularity which may not vitiate the reference.[3] An award made beyond the time fixed is liable to be set aside under Paragraph 15, infra, though an award made within the time fixed but filed after time is not bad.[4]

As to the power of the Court to extend time fixed, see paragraph 8 below.

Para. 3,
Notes
6—8.

6. Court if can extend time fixed.—See paragraph 8, infra.

7. When award is said to be "made".—An award is made when the arbitrators have drawn up, executed and signed it. It is the making of the award that should be within the time fixed. The filing thereof into Court after the time fixed will not vitiate the award.[1] Under the old Code, the word used was "delivery" and even then it was interpreted to mean only the making of the award as distinguished from its being filed in Court.[2]

8. Effect of order of reference.—Where a Court makes an order of reference to arbitration, its jurisdiction to deal with the case, so long as the proceedings are pending before the arbitrator, is suspended. It cannot, therefore, deal with the case except as provided in this schedule (viz., paragraphs 5, 8 and 15).[1] Thus it cannot

(1) allow the withdrawal of the suit under O. 23, R. 1.[2]

(2) dismiss the suit under O. 9, R. 3.[3]

(3) remove the arbitrator or substitute a new one.[4]

(4) record a compromise between the parties.[5]

(5) deal with the case on the merits.[6]

In the following matters, however, it has been held that the Court can, pass appropriate orders in the suit:—

(1) It can deal with an application to appoint an interim receiver or to grant an injunction.[7]

(2) It can deal with application to bring the legal representatives of a deceased party on record.[8]

P. 4. [S. 509.] (1) Where the reference is to two or more arbitrators, provision shall be made in the order for a difference of opinion among the arbitrators—

(a) by the appointment of an umpire; or

(b) by declaring that, if the majority of the arbitrators agree, the decision of the majority shall prevail; or

(c) by empowering the arbitrators to appoint an umpire; or

(d) otherwise as may be agreed between the parties or, if they cannot agree, as the Court may determine.

(2) Where an umpire is appointed, the Court shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of his award in case he is required to act.

3. Appointment of umpire by arbitrators.
4. Extension of time for submission by umpire.
5. Delegation of duty by arbitrators.

1. Scope of the Paragraph.—Where two or more arbitrators are appointed, the Court is bound to provide, in its order of reference, for a difference of opinion among the arbitrators, in the manner specified in this Paragraph. Where no such provision was made, and there having been a difference of opinion among the arbitrators, the Court decided the case itself on the evidence given before the arbitrators, the High Court remanded the case to the lower Court to make a fresh submission to the arbitrators after complying with the requirements of this Paragraph.[1] Where, however, under similar circumstances the lower Court decided the case on evidence taken before itself it was held by the High Court that it would not be right to remand the case for a fresh reference.[2] See also Note 2, Pts. (4) and (5), infra.

Para. 4, Notes 2—4.

2. Decision of majority—Cl. (b).—Unless the order of reference provides that the decision of the majority or of the umpire, if any, shall prevail, the award must be by all the arbitrators. An award by only a majority of the arbitrators in such cases is not valid.[1] If, however, the application for the order of reference provides that the opinion of the majority shall prevail, the fact that the order of reference does not refer to it will not invalidate the award by the majority of the arbitrators.[2] The reason is that the authority of the Court to make a reference depends upon the agreement of the parties, that if the parties agree that the opinion of the majority shall prevail, the only order that the Court could pass is an order of reference to that effect, and that it should therefore be deemed to have passed the order that it ought to have passed.[3] Where one of the parties to a reference is a minor, his guardian can consent to abide by the decision of a majority of the arbitrators.[3-a] But the fact that neither the application for an order of reference nor the order of reference makes any such provision as provided by this Paragraph will not nullify an unanimous award by all the arbitrators.[4] Where, in such a case, the arbitrators gave an unanimous award as to part and were divided as to part, the former is binding on the parties though the opinion of the majority as to the latter is not.[5]

It should be noted that even if a provision is made in the order of reference that the decision of the majority shall prevail, it is essential that all the arbitrators should be present at the deliberations. If they are present at the proceedings but some of them thereafter express their dissent and leave the place, the decision of the majority will be perfectly valid.[6] But if they are not so present and do not take part in the deliberations the award is invalid and not binding on the parties.[7] See also Note 2 to paragraph 10, infra.

3. Appointment of umpire by arbitrators.—When an umpire is appointed he is under no obligation to agree with one or other of the dissenting arbitrators. He is entitled to settle the matter in his own way according to what he thinks proper. He need not confer with the arbitrators.[1]

4. Extension of time for submission by umpire.—The umpire has the same powers of the arbitrators and could by application get extension of time for filing his award. See paragraph 8, below.

5. Delegation of duty by arbitrators.—The arbitrators appointed by Court under this Schedule cannot delegate their authority to a third person, nor can the parties by their consent confer such a power on the arbitrators in derogation of the Court's order.[1]

But an arbitrator may delegate to a third person the performance of any acts which are merely ministerial in their nature.[2]

Where the arbitrators are empowered to choose an umpire, they have themselves to make the choice and ought not to delegate it to a third person.[3]

Para. 5.

Power of Court to appoint arbitrator in certain cases.

P. 5. [Ss. 507, 510-511.] (1) In any of the following cases, namely:—

(a) where the parties cannot agree within a reasonable time with respect to the appointment of an arbitrator, or the person appointed refuses to accept the office of arbitrator, or

(b) where an arbitrator or umpire—

- (i) dies, or
- (ii) refuses or neglects to act or becomes incapable of acting, or
- (iii) leaves British India in circumstances showing that he will probably not return at an early date, or

(c) where the arbitrators are empowered by the order of reference to appoint an umpire and fail to do so, any party may serve the other party or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to appoint an arbitrator or umpire.

(2) If, within seven clear days after such notice has been served or such further time as the Court may in each case allow, no arbitrator or no umpire is appointed, as the case may be, the Court may, on application by the party who gave the notice, and after giving the other party an opportunity of being heard, appoint an arbitrator or umpire or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit.

Duty of Court under this paragraph. See Note 3, Pts. (2) and (3).

Notice to appoint new arbitrator. See Note 5, Pts. (1) and (2).

1. Legislative changes:—

The words "and the parties desire that the nomination shall be made by the Court" which occurred in S. 507 of the old Code have been omitted.

2. Appointment of new arbitrator or umpire.—Under Ss. 507 and 510 of the old Code where the arbitrator nominated refused to accept the "office," the Court could not appoint a new arbitrator unless all the parties desired the Court to do so, but that where the arbitrator, after accepting the office refused to act, the Court may appoint an arbitrator on the application of some only of the parties.[1] In Sadik Hussain v. Kaniz Zhora Begam,[2] the Judicial Committee pointed out on a true construction of S. 510, there is no room for such a distinction and that the expression "refuses to act" in S. 510 included also a case where an arbitrator refused to accept the office inasmuch as the acceptance of the office was the first essential act of an arbitrator. The omission of the words "and the parties desire, etc." has brought the present Paragraph in conformity with the decision of the Privy Council. The Court can under the present Paragraph appoint an arbitrator without the consent of all the parties in both cases, viz., where an arbitrator refuses to accept the office as well as where he refuses to act; though this can be done only on application by either party and after notice to the opposite party.

3. Arbitrator refusing to act.—It is one of the most essential principles of the law of arbitration that the adjudication of disputes by arbitrators should be the result of their free consent to undertake the duties of arbitrating between the contending parties. The finality of an award is based on the principle that the arbitrators are judges chosen by the parties themselves and are willing to settle the disputes referred to them. Hence where an arbitrator refuses to act, the Court has no power to compel him to arbitrate against his will.[1] The duty of the Court in such a case is either to appoint a new arbitrator, or supersede the reference and proceed with the suit.[2] If the Court does neither of these two things, the further proceedings in arbitration and the resulting award thereon are invalid.[3] But an arbitrator has full power to retract his resignation before it is accepted and acted upon by the Court; and an award made subsequent to such retraction is not invalid by reason of the original refusal to act.[4] Similarly, if the Court asks the arbitrator to reconsider his refusal or resignation and he thereupon agrees to act and proceeds to arbitrate, the award will not be invalid.[5]

A refusal on the part of the arbitrator to act can be implied from his conduct as, for instance, where he fails to submit the award within the time fixed.[6]

4. Arbitrator becoming incapable of acting.—When an arbitrator becomes incapable of acting by reason, for example, of illness, the Court can supersede the reference or appoint a new arbitrator.[1] The Court can act similarly when an umpire leaves British India and there is no evidence to show his intention to return at an early date.[2]

5. Appointment of new arbitrator.—Before the Court proceeds to make a new appointment under this Paragraph not only should one of the conditions mentioned in Cls. (a) and (b) happen, but the requirement as to the notice to the opposite party should also be fulfilled.[1] If the Court proceeds to make an appointment without such notice it acts with material irregularity.[2]

Where, however, the parties by mutual agreement make a change in the personal of the arbitrators without the intervention of the Court and carry on the arbitration proceedings the award is not invalid by reason of the omission to follow the procedure prescribed by this Paragraph. The reason is that the very foundation of arbitration proceedings is the consent of the parties and such consent will cure any defect in the matter of procedure.[3]

After notice is given to the opposite party as required, by sub-Para. (1) it is open to the parties themselves to appoint an arbitrator provided all the parties agree.[4] (Cf. the provisions of Para. 2, supra, and S. 8 of the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899.) If the parties fail to make such appointment the Court can appoint the arbitrator after hearing the parties. But it is not bound to do so in all cases. It has a discretion either to appoint the arbitrator or to supersede the reference.[5] In making a new appointment the Court has no power to compel an unwilling party to pay remuneration to the arbitrator chosen by it especially where there is no provision for the same in the original reference.[6]

If a party does not object to the appointment by the Court of the nominee of the opposite party as arbitrator, but acquiesces in it by taking part in proceedings before him, he will be estopped from questioning the validity of the appointment later on when the award goes against him.[7]

6. Appointment of an umpire.—The power of the Court to appoint an umpire under this Para. is not unlimited; but is controlled and limited by the terms of the agreement between the parties as to what course is to be adopted if there is a difference of opinion among the arbitrators. Thus where the terms of the submission to arbitration were that an umpire should be selected from out of seven persons named therein and the umpire first chosen declined to act, it was held that the Court could not ignore the remaining six persons and appoint a stranger as an umpire, and that the award in such a case was not valid.[1]

7. Order superseding arbitration.—The Court cannot supersede the reference under this Paragraph unless the conditions prescribed herein are fulfilled.[1] Thus, an accusation of partiality against the arbitrator[2] or an allegation that an umpire has been tampered with[3] or the fact that one of the parties fails to pay his share of the remuneration fixed for the arbitrator[4] are not grounds for superseding the reference under this Paragraph.

The Court cannot suo motu supersede the reference without there being any application by the parties and without the procedure as to notice being complied with.[5] Nor can a mere agreement of the parties to refer the matter to a person other than the arbitrator already chosen have the effect of superseding the reference.[6]

Where the Court decides to supersede the reference, it is bound to proceed with the suit. Where there is no suit pending and the Court has discharged itself of the Lis by passing a final decree, it cannot supersede the reference. Thus, where the parties to a suit settled their disputes as to partition but agreed that the shares should be worked out and properties allotted by certain arbitrators and the Court passed a decree in pursuance of the settlement under S. 375 (now O. 23, R. 3) and subsequently one of the arbitrators declined to act as an arbitrator, the Judicial Committee held that the Court could not supersede the reference and allot the shares. Their Lordships observed: "to proceed with the suit (to use the language of S. 510) was, in this case, in their Lordships' view, impossible" and referring to the decree they proceeded to say "it put an end to the suit and that was the very object of the compromise. The alternative in S. 510 is impossible because there is no suit now pending with which the Court can proceed. All that the Courts in India could do was to take advantage of the sections of the Code which enabled them to keep the machinery of arbitration going".[7]

Where an arbitration fails and the Court decides to supersede the reference, it ought not to dispose of the suit at once without fixing a date for its hearing and giving due notice thereof to the parties.[8] But the Court need not consider a second reference to arbitration when it decides to go on with the case.[9]

An order superseding an arbitration can be implied as where the arbitrators refuse to act and the Court proceeds to try the suit.[10]

8. Revision.—An order passed under this Paragraph is not appealable. But an omission to comply with the formalities prescribed by this Paragraph as to notice amounts to a material irregularity and can be revised.[1] An order superseding the arbitration or appointing a fresh arbitrator is an order deciding a "case" within the meaning of S. 115 of the Code.[2]

(2) Persons not attending in accordance with such process, or making any other default, or refusing to give their evidence, or guilty of any comtempt to the arbitrator or umpire during the investigation of the matters referred, shall be subject to the like disadvantages, penalties and punishments, by order of the Court on the representation of the arbitrator or umpire, as they would incur for the like offences in suits tried before the Court.

Refusing to give evidence.—See Note 1, Pt. (5).

1. Scope of the Paragraph.—This Paragraph empowers the arbitrator to seek the assistance of the Court in the matter of summoning witnesses and enforcing their attendance. An arbitrator should notify the date of the hearing to the parties and he cannot take evidence in the absence of the parties and without their knowledge.[1] But where after notice either party fails to appear or notifies his withdrawal from the submission[2] he can proceed ex parte. An award passed ex parte cannot be set aside unless sufficient cause is shown for the non-appearance of the party.[3]

An arbitrator should take only such evidence as is required by the terms of the agreement referring the question in dispute to arbitration.[4]

The words "refusing to give evidence" in Cl. 2 refers to the case of a person who refuses to give evidence when placed on oath and is required to answer any question put to him and not to a case where a person elects not to produce any evidence.[5]

Extension of time for making award.

P. 8. [S. 514.] Where the arbitrators or the umpire cannot complete the award within the period specified in the order, the Court may, if it thinks fit, either allow further time, and from time to time, either before or after the expiration of the period fixed for the making of the award, enlarge such period; or may make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The words "where the arbitrators or the umpire cannot complete the award" have been substituted for the words "if from the want of necessary evidence or information or from any other cause" which occurred in the corresponding S. 514 of the old Code. The effect of the alteration is that the scope of this Paragraph has been enlarged.

2. The words "either before or after the expiration of the period fixed" have been newly added after the words "from time to time". They give effect to the undermentioned decisions under the old Code[1] which held that the Court had power to extend the time for the making of an award even after the expiry of the time originally fixed.

2. Award made out of time.—See Notes to Para. 3, ante.

3. Extension of time.—The Court can extend the time fixed for making an award at any time before the award is actually made even though the time originally fixed may have expired at the time of such further extension.[1] But when once an award is made, the power of the Court to grant further time under this Paragraph becomes spent and cannot be exercised thereafter.[2] Nor has the Court power under S. 148 of the Code to extend the time in such a case, for that section does not enable the Court to extend the time for the doing of any particular act when in truth and in fact the act has already been done.[3] Where, however, an award is simply signed but not announced to the parties or sent to Court, the award cannot be said to be finally made and complete, and an order of extension of time subsequent to such signing is not invalid.[4] On an application for extension of time under this Paragraph, the Court should, as has been seen in Note 5 to Para. 3 above, itself, fix the further time and cannot delegate the power to do so to the arbitrators.

An order of extension of time can be implied from the proceeding of the Court.[5] In the case cited below[6] it was held that an oral application for extension of time was not incompetent.

4. Estoppel.—As will be seen from the Notes to Para. 15, infra, an award passed out of time is not a nullity under the present Code. Consequently the parties may, in such cases, be estopped by their conduct from disputing the validity thereof.[1]

5. Or may make an order superseding the reference.—The Court has a discretion under this Paragraph either to extend the time fixed for the award or to supersede the reference. Thus, where the arbitrators are guilty of neglect in submitting their award in spite of several extensions of time, the Court can supersede the reference and proceed with the suit.[1] But the Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the suit and cannot dismiss it for default until and unless it supersedes the reference.[2] An order superseding the reference need not, however, be express. It can be implied from the procedure adopted by the Court.[3]

As already seen in Note 5 to Para. 3 above an award made within time but filed into Court later is not invalid, and the Court cannot supersede the reference in such a case.[4]

Para. 8, Notes 5–6.

Where the Court supersedes the reference, it cannot straightaway dispose of the suit on the same day. It should fix a date for the hearing and give due notice of the same to the parties.[5] As to whether the Court has power to set aside an order superseding the reference, see the case cited below.[6]

6. Appeal.—An order superseding an arbitration where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court is appealable under S. 104, sub-S. (1), Cl. (a).

Where umpire may arbitrate in lieu of arbitrators.

Para. 9, Note 1.

P. 9. [S. 515.] Where an umpire has been appointed, he may enter on the reference in the place of the arbitrators,—

(a) if they have allowed the appointed time to expire without making an award, or

(b) if they have delivered to the Court or to the umpire a notice in writing stating that they cannot agree.

1. Umpire when empowered to arbitrate in liew of arbitrators.—An umpire can enter on the reference and himself make the award only in two cases:—

(1) Where the arbitrators have allowed the appointed time to expire without making an award.

(2) When they have delivered to the Court or to the umpire a notice in writing stating that they cannot agree.[1]

Thus, where one of several arbitrators absented himself from the arbitration proceedings and after the expiry of the time fixed for the award, the umpire approached the Court for direction, it was held that Cl. (a) applied to this case and the umpire was himself entitled to make an award.[2] An umpire is under no obligation to agree with one or others of the dissenting arbitrators or to confer with them, but is entitled to settle the matter in his own way according to what he thinks proper.[3] But where the agreement of reference provides that the umpire should agree with one or other of the sets of the dissenting arbitrators, an award by the umpire which agrees with neither of the two sets of arbitrators, is not valid.[4]

Award to be signed and filed.

Synopsis.

1. Award to be signed.
2. Necessity of presence of arbitrators at meetings.
3. "Together with any depositions and documents."

6. Form of award.

1. Award to be signed.—An award embodies the decision of an arbitrator and must be signed by him[1] before it is filed into Court.[2] Where there are several arbitrators it is essential that all of them should sign the award.[3] Where, however, the parties agree to be bound by the decision of the majority, it is enough if the award is signed by the majority of the arbitrators.[4] An award made by more persons than those appointed is invalid[5] unless the parties acquiesce in the same.[6]

It is not necessary in the case of several arbitrators that all of them should sign the award at the same time and in the same place.[7] Where an award is duly signed the fact that it is not stamped[8] or that the fair copy of the award is not signed by all of them[9] would not affect the validity of the award. But where an arbitrator signs a blank paper before the decision is embodied in it, the award is not properly signed.[10]

When once an award is made the arbitrators become functus officio and they have no power to alter[11] or review[12] the award, unless the Court or the parties by consent, remit the matter to them for reconsideration.[13] In the case cited below[14] it was held that an arbitrator was justified in refusing to sign the award before it was engrossed on stamp paper, although he had signed the memorandum of award, on the ground that owing to some misunderstanding in the language his opinion had to be changed.

The provisions of this Paragraph apply only to a reference to arbitration through the intervention of the Court, and not to an award made on a private reference out of Court. The award in the latter case is not invalid by reason of the want of signature of the arbitrators.[15] The reason is that a private award can even be an oral one and an award in writing will not be less valid because it was not signed by the arbitrators.

The report of arbitrators embodying a compromise arrived at between the parties subsequent to the reference is not an award.[16]

2. Necessity of presence of arbitrators at meetings.—Where there are several arbitrators appointed, it is essential for the validity of the award that all of them should be present at all the meetings including the last, that witnesses should be examined in their presence and all of them should act together and give the award.[1] See also Note 2 to Para. 4, ante. But the absence of one of them at a meeting in which nothing material was done and no enquiry was made will not invalidate the award.[2]

3. "Together with any depositions and documents."—Though this paragraph contemplates the possibility of the depositions of witnesses being reduced to writing by the arbitrators, it does not oblige them to keep such a record.[1] The mere fact that an arbitrator has omitted to file along with his award the depositions of the witnesses examined by him or the documentary evidence filed before him will not justify the Court in holding on that ground that the award is invalid though it may lead to the conclusion that the arbitrator has not acted in accordance with law and is guilty of misconduct as stated in Para. 15.[2]

An arbitrator should not permit the removal of documents entrusted to him and forming part of the record.[3] He should return them to the Court. The Court can also call upon him to give up the same to the Court when his right to keep them as arbitrator has come to an end.[4]

4. Notice of the filing shall be given.—The provisions of this Paragraph are mandatory and the Court is bound to give notice of the filing of the award to the parties.[1] Under Article 158 of the Limitation Act, the parties are enitled to ten days time for filing their objections to the award and such period is to be computed from the date on which the notice is given.[2] The omission to give notice is a material irregularity and affords a ground for interference by the High Court in revision.[3] If a decree is passed in terms of the award without the notice required by this paragraph to be given, the decree is bad and is liable to be set aside.[4]

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a formal notice under this paragraph is necessary where the parties are made aware of the filing of the award without such formal notice. In the undermentioned cases[5] it has been held that where the parties are made aware of the filing of the award, the absence of a formal notice would not vitiate the proceedings. A contrary view, namely, that a formal notice under this paragraph is necessary and knowledge aliunde is not sufficient has been taken in the following decisions.[6]

5. Delivery of the award.—An award should be filed into the Court and then only the Court can proceed further and pass a decree.[1] But the filing of the award need not be personally made by the arbitrator. It can be handed over to the parties who may file it into Court.[2] It is, however, necessary that the arbitrator should cause the award to be filed into Court. Where an award reached the Court mysteriously by the post and none of the arbitrators took the responsibility of saying who caused the same to be sent, it was held that the Court could not act upon the award.[3]

The act of an arbitrator in handing over an award to the proper officer of the Court for the purpose of being filed is not an application within the meaning of Article 178 of the Limitation Act. Hence, the Article does not apply to the delivery of an award by an arbitrator to the Court.[4]

Para. 11, Note 1.

Statement of special case by arbitrators or umpire.

P. 11. [S. 517.] Upon any reference by an order of the Court, the arbitrator or umpire may, with the leave of the Court, state the award as to the whole or any part thereof in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court, and the Court shall deliver its opinion thereon, and shall order, such opinion to be added to and to form part of the award.

Synopsis.

1. Special case.	2 Appeal.

1. Special case.—This paragraph is intended to provide for cases where any difficult and complicated questions of law arise for consideration before the arbitrators and they require the help of the Court to enable them to complete the award.[1] Though this paragraph does not expressly state that the special case should relate only to a question of law, yet sufficient indication as to the scope of this paragraph is given by the form prescribed (Form No. 4 of Appendix to this Schedule) which expressly mentions only questions of law.[2] But there is nothing objectionable in the Court's helping the arbitrators with advice and orders when they come to it in a difficulty.[3]

Where a special case is submitted to the opinion of the Court and the Court completes the award by deciding the special case it is bound to give the parties an opportunity of objecting to the award before a judgment is pronounced upon it.[4]

A charge of misconduct against the umpire cannot be strengthened from the mere fact that, in the exercise of his discretion, he refused to state a special case for the opinion of the Court.[5] As to the form of special case in general, see O. 36, ante.

2. Appeal.—Under S. 104, sub-S. (1), Cl. (b) an order on an award stated in the form of a special case is appealable. Where an agreement of reference provided that in case of disagreement between the arbitrators, the matter in difference should be referred to the umpire who should make the award, and the arbitrators who differed on a question of law, without referring the matter to the umpire, referred it to the opinion of the Court, it was held that the order of the Court was not an order on an award stated in the form of a special case and was not therefore appealable.[1]

Para. 12, Note 1.

Power to modify or correct award.

(a) where it appears that a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration and such part can be separated from the other part and does not affect the decision on the matter referred; or

(b) where the award is imperfect in form, or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision; or

award except in the limited manner prescribed by this paragraph.[1] Where a dispute is referred to arbitration and the arbitrators are empowered to decide upon all the points involved in it, the arbitrators have full power not only to fix the liability between the parties but also the manner in which such liability is to be discharged. Thus the arbitrators can order the amount due to the plaintiff to be paid by instalments, and the Court cannot interfere with such a direction in the award.[2] Nor can the Court add a direction of its own to the award.[3] It is well settled that a Court acts without jurisdiction if it modifies an award because it takes a different view from that held by the arbitrators.[4]

Where the Court modifies an award under this paragraph, it is the modified award and not the original award with which the decree should accord.[5]

The provisions of this paragraph apply only to an award made through the intervention of the Court; the Court has no power under this paragraph to modify or correct an award made on a private reference out of Court.[6]

2. "Part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration."— An award should be made with reference to the points in dispute referred to them by the parties. Where the award decides matters extraneous to the reference, the award is not valid unless that portion which is in excess can be separated from the rest and does not affect the decision on the matter referred to. In the latter case, the Court can under Cl. (a) give effect to the valid portion of the award ignoring the rest.[1] Where no separation is possible, the Court can remit the award to the arbitrators for reconsideration under Para. 14 and if they fail to reconsider it the award becomes void by virtue of Para. 15.

3. Award imperfect in form or containing an obvious error. Cl. (b).—The Court can rectify an obvious error in the award. Thus where an issue as to whether a particular property was endowed property and whether it was partible or not was referred to arbitration, and the arbitrators decided that the property was not an endowed one but nevertheless declared that it should not be partitioned, it was held that there was an obvious error in the award and that the Court could amend the direction that the property should remain impartible.[1]

The provisions of this clause can be invoked only if the imperfection in form exists in the award at the time when it is filed in Court, and not where it comes into existence at a subsequent stage on the happening of an unanticipated event.[2]

4. Clerical mistake. Cl. (c).—As in the case of decrees the Court has power under this paragraph to correct clerical mistakes and errors arising from accidental slips or omissions.[1] But the Court has no power to go into the merits and award a sum different from that awarded by the arbitrators, on the ground that the calculation then made was wrong.[2] The Chief Court of Oudh[3] has held that the Court can, under this paragraph, as also under its inherent powers amend a clerical slip in the award even after a decree is passed in terms of the award.

5. Power of an arbitrator to set aside gift deed conditional on payment of compensation.—Where the parties to a suit agree to refer their disputes in relation to a deed of gift to arbitration, and the terms of the reference do not contain any limitation as regards the powers of the arbitrators, an award by the arbitrators setting aside the deed of gift upon payment of compensation to the plaintiff and directing the defendant to remain in possession until the amount is paid is perfectly valid. power under this paragraph to interfere with the direction so contained in the award.[1]

6. Limitation.—No specific provision is made in the Limitation Act for an application to modify or correct an award under this paragraph. The ten days period prescribed by Article 158 of the Limitation Act does not apply to an application under this paragraph.[1]

In the undermentioned case[2] it has been held that even a formal application by a party is not necessary.

7. Appeal.—By virtue of S. 104, sub-S. (1) Cl. (a) an appeal lies from an order modifying or correcting an award.

8. Presidency Small Cause Courts.—An order of a single Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court modifying an award under this paragraph is not a decree passed on an award, and an application to the Full Bench under S. 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act is competent.[1]

Order as to costs of arbitration.

P. 13. [S. 519.] The Court may also make such order as it thinks fit respecting the costs of the arbitration where any question arises respecting such costs and the award contains no sufficient provision concerning them.

Synopsis.

1. Power of an arbitrator to award costs. 2. Award of costs by the Court.

1. Power of an arbitrator to award costs.—An arbitrator is empowered to deal with the question of costs when it is included in the reference[1] or where all the questions involved in the suit are referred to him.[2] But where only some of the issues arising in the case are the subject of reference and the question of costs is not one of them, the arbitrator has no power to award costs.[3] If he nevertheless makes an order as to costs the award is not invalid if the remainder of the award remains unaffected by the order as to costs. In such a case the Court can proceed under Cl. (a) of the last paragraph.[4]

As to the remuneration of the arbitrators, see the cases cited below.[5]

2. Award of costs by the Court.—Where the award does not make provision for costs it is open to the Court to make an order as to costs under this paragraph.[1] In the undermentioned case[2] where all the matters in dispute in a suit were referred to arbitration, and the award did not deal with the question of costs, the High Court of Allahabad has held that the Court could not, under this paragraph award costs incurred up to the date of the reference but could only award the costs incurred subsequent thereto.

Where award or matter referred to arbitration may be remitted

P. 14. [S. 520.] The Court may remit the award or any matter referred to arbitration to the reconsideration of the same arbitrator or umpire, upon such terms as it thinks fit,—

(a) where the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration,[3] or where it determines any matter not referred to arbitration,[4] unless such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred;

(b) where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution;[5]

(c) where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it.[6]

sideration where there are omissions or defects therein which are such as cannot be modified or corrected by the Court itself under Paragraph 12.[1] The Court is, however, confined to the specific grounds mentioned in this paragraph and has no power to remit an award on other grounds.[2]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the Court can remit the award in part only and treat the award as to the other part as final. According to the High Court of Allahabad there is no provision in the Code by which a portion of an award only may be remitted.[3] "It is impossible to say for any person who is not the arbitrator, how the arbitrator proceeded to frame his award. It may be that the portion objected to has an intimate connection with the portion which is not objected to. The arbitrators, therefore, must be given a free hand to recast the award".[4] The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind has held that where an award is bad as to a part only and is sent back as to that alone, the arbitrator is functus officio as to the good parts and cannot alter his judgment as to them.[5] It is submitted, that the former view is correct. When the Court decides to remit the award under this paragraph, it is not final[6] and so long as it is not final and is in the hands of the arbitrator, it can be altered by him.[6-a]

The Court has a discretion to remit or not to remit an award.[7] Thus, where there is any circumstance in the position of the arbitrator such which tends to produce a bias in his mind, the Court will in its discretion, refuse to remit the award to the arbitrator for reconsideration.[8]

3. Award leaving undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration.—Where the arbitrators have not, in their award, decided any matter referred to them, the Court may, under Cl. (a), remit the award for reconsideration.[1] "The ground upon which an award which does not dispose of all the matters referred has been held to be invalid appears to be that there is an implied condition that it shall do so''.[2] But it is open to the parties to waive this condition.[3] Thus, where all the parties agree before the arbitrator that an incomplete award may be made or where they all represent that there is no longer and controversy between them upon a particular point, the fact that the award is incomplete or silent on such point will not vitiate it.[4] An award cannot be said to be incomplete because, in a suit involving a number of issues, the arbitrators have not given a decision on each of them. It is enough if they give a decision on the whole matter in issue between the parties.[5]

4. Award determining matter not referred to arbitration.—It is a fundamental principle of the Law of Arbitration that the submission furnishes the source and prescribes the limits of the arbitrators' authority and, that, therefore, the award must conform to the submission both in substance and in form.[1] Consequently if the award decides matters not within the scope of the submission it is void as regards the portion in excess of the submission. If such portion is, however, separable from and independent of the remainder effect can be given to the rest of the award[1-a] but if the extraneous matters cannot be so separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred, the Court may remit the award for reconsideration.[2]

5. ''Where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution''.—An award, to be capable of execution, ought to be certain, so that no reasonable doubt can 'arise' upon the face of it as to the arbitrators' meaning or as to the nature and extent of the right and duties imposed by it upon the parties.[1] The fact that a particular expression used in an award is capable of more than one interpretation does not show, that it is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution.[2] Where the arbitrators give the method for calculating the amount awarded without specifying the actual amount due, the award can be considered as sufficiently certain inasmuch as the actual result can be worked out.[3]

6. Where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it.—It has been seen in Note 10 to Paragraph 1, ante that parties are entitled to submit questions of law as well as questions of fact for arbitration and that the arbitrators have jurisdiction to decide the same. Where they so decide a question specifically submitted to them for decision, but such decision happens to be erroneous in law, it cannot, nevertheless be said that there is any error apparent on the face of the award,[1] and the Court has no right to sit in judgment over the views of the arbitrator.[2]

Illustration.

S sued V and others for a share in the family properties. V contended in defence that S was born blind and that, therefore, he was not entitled to any share under the Hindu Law. The suit was then referred to arbitration and the arbitrators awarded S a life interest in a fourth share of the properties subject to its becoming an absolute interest in case he married. It was held that the award was not vitiated by an error of law apparent on the face of the award.[3]

But where a question of law is not specifically submitted to the arbitrators for decision and they state a wrong legal proposition and base their award on the matters referred to them, on such proposition, there is an error of law on the face of the award.[4] In Chamsey Bhara and Co., Ltd., v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd.[5] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—"An error in law on the face of the award means, in their Lordships' view, that you can find in the award or a document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can say is erroneous".

1. A, an arbitrator, states a special case and gets an opinion of the Court. In making the award, he states that opinion and bases his award upon it. The appellate Court finds that the opinion as given is erroneous. There is an error in law on the face of the award which will entitle appellate Court to remit the award for reconsideration.[6]
2. A reference was made to arbitrators to divide family properties between a Hindu father and his sons. The eldest son had assisted the father to attain success in his business and thus to acquire the property. In consideration of that the arbitrators awarded him Rs. 11,000 in excess of his share describing it as "Jyeshta Bhagam". It was held that though the rule of "Jyeshta Bhagam" is obsolete and illegal, the mere use of the term in the award did not make it illegal, when the Court is satisfied that the extra amount was really given to the eldest son for services rendered.[7]

See also the undermentioned cases[8] as to what is and what is not illegality apparent on the face of the award.

An arithmetical error in the award made by the arbitrator in arriving at the sums due by one party to another is not an illegality apparent on the face of the award.[9]

It has been already mentioned above that an error of law, in order to vitiate an award, must be apparent on the face of the award or some other document attached to the award.[9-a] Thus, where a dispute arising out of a contract is referred to arbitrators and a reference is made in the award to a contention of one party, it does not open the door to seeing first what the contention is and then going to the contract on which the rights of parties depends to see if that contention is sound.[10] Similarly, where an award makes an allusion to the contract very guardedly and for the purpose only of ear-marking the origin of the dispute in question, it does not enable a party to contend that the contract was incorporated into the award by the reference mentioned above and then to say that the award discloses an error in law in construing the terms of the contract.[11]

7. Remittal of private awards.—Where an award is made without the intervention of a Court and an application is made under Para. 20, infra to file the award, the Court may, under Para. 21, file the award if no such ground as is mentioned in Paras. 14 and 15 is proved. But the fact that there are any of the grounds specified in this paragraph does not empower the Court to remit the award for reconsideration of the arbitrators, as in the case of an award made through the intervention of the Court.[1] Therefore, if the award leaves undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration[2] or is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution[3] the award is invalid and the application under Para. 20 must be dismissed. But where the award determines any matter not referred to arbitration and such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred, the whole award is not invalid and the decisions on the portions in excess of the authority of the arbitrators can be treated as null and void.[4]

8. Limitation.—Art. 158 of the Limitation Act does not apply to proceedings under this paragraph and, therefore, there is no period of limitation for making an application under this paragraph to remit an award for the reconsideration of the arbitrators.[1]

9. Appeal.—An order remitting[1] or refusing to remit[2] an award for the reconsideration of the arbitrators is not appealable. Where an award is remitted under this paragraph and the arbitrators refuse to reconsider the award, which consequently becomes void under Para. 15, infra and the Court ultimately passes a decree on the merits, the legality of the order remitting the award may be challenged in an appeal against the decree.[3] See also S. 105, Note 6, Pt. 3. But where after remittal, the arbitrators submit a fresh award and the Court passes a decree in accordance with the revised award, no appeal will lie from such decree on the ground that the order of remittal under this paragraph was wrong and that the original award ought to have been accepted and acted upon.[4] See also notes to Para. 16, infra.

10. Revision.—The High Court cannot interfere in revision with an order of the Court remitting an award for reconsideration of the arbitrators.[1]

11. Arbitration under other Acts.—See Note 6-a to Para. 1. In an arbitration proceeding regarding boundary disputes under S. 120 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (V of 1879), the Superintendent of Survey or the Boundary Officer is empowered to remit an award for the reconsideration of the arbitration committee for any of the causes set forth in this paragraph.

Grounds for setting aside award.

P. 15. [S. 521.] (1) An award remitted under paragraph 14 becomes void on failure of the arbitrator or umpire to reconsider it. But no award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds namely:—

(b) either party having been guilty of fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed,[10] or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator or umpire;

(c) the award having been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration and proceeding with the suit or after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court [12] or being otherwise invalid.[13]

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "and no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court" which occurred at the end of S. 521 of the old Code have been omitted and the words "or after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court or being otherwise invalid" have been newly added at the end of Cl. (c) of sub-S. (1). See Notes 12 and 13, infra.
2. Sub-section (2) is new.

2. Procedure in enquiry under this paragraph.—Where an application is made to set aside an award on any of the grounds mentioned in this paragraph, the Court is bound to allow the applicant an opportunity to produce evidence to substantiate his objections[1] and to enquire into the allegations made by him.[2] The burden of proving such allegations is on the person seeking to have the award set aside.[3]

A party in whose favour an award has been passed cannot object thereto on the ground that the arbitrators exceeded their jurisdiction.[4]

3. Refusal to reconsider award remitted.—If an award has been remitted to the arbitrators for their reconsideration under Para. 14, ante and the arbitrators decline to submit a fresh award, the award becomes void and

Para. 15, Notes 3—6.

the Court has no alternative but to try the case itself.[1] It is not necessary in such a case for the Court to find corruption or misconduct.[2] But where the arbitrators after remittal reconsider the matter to the best of their ability and come to the same conclusion, the award does not become void.[3]

4. Grounds for setting aside award.—An award can be set aside only on one or more of the grounds mentioned in this paragraph.[1] Therefore a provision in the agreement of reference that any of the parties might object to the award on any account is ultra vires and contrary to the procedure prescribed by this paragraph.[2]

As to the several grounds on which an award may be set aside see Notes 5 to 13, infra.

5. "Corruption or misconduct".—The word "Misconduct" when applied to the proceedings of arbitrators does not necessarily imply moral turpitude; it is used in the sense of breach or neglect of such duties and responsibilities as devolve on the arbitrators acting judicially and as the Courts of Justice expect from them before allowing finality to their awards.[1] In other words it comprehends action on the part of the arbitrator which, upon the face of it, is opposed to all rational and reasonable principles that should govern the procedure of any person who is called upon to decide questions in difference referred to him by the parties.[2]

The word "corruption" necessarily implies misconduct; but "misconduct" does not of necessity imply corruption. Thus an award may be set aside on the ground of misconduct which does not amount to corruption.[3]

Where it is proved that an arbitrator has been guilty of misconduct, it is not necessary to prove prejudice in order that the award may be set aside; but the irregularity may be cured by waiver.[4]

6. Acts amounting to misconduct.—We now proceed to discuss some instances of misconduct justifying the setting aside of an award under clause (a) of this paragraph:—

(1) Where more than one arbitrator is appointed, the presence of all of them at all meetings and, above all, at the last meeting when the final act of arbitration is done, is essential to the validity of the award. Therefore the absence of some of the arbitrators at some of the meetings is misconduct within the meaning of this paragraph.[1] The reason is that in such cases the parties intend that all the persons to whom the reference is made shall meet and discuss together all the matters referred and that the award should be the result of their united deliberations. This conference and deliberation in the presence of all the arbitrators are the very essence of the arbitration and the sole reason why the award is made binding. The facts that the agreement of reference provided for a valid award by the majority of the arbitrators and that a majority of them were present at all the meetings will not make the award valid.[2] Similarly where a reference was made to three persons and the award purported to be made by four persons, it was set aside on the ground that the association of the fourth person might have influenced the decision of the others.[3] The absence of an arbitrator at some of the meetings does not, however, amount to misconduct if the act done at such meetings is not of a judicial nature, but merely ministerial in its character.[4]

As to the validity of an award made by a majority of arbitrators, see Note 2 to Para. 4.

(2) "If irregularities in procedure can be proved which would amount to no proper hearing of the matters in dispute there would be misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award without any imputation on the honesty or impartiality of the arbitrator".[5]

Para. 15, Note 6.

(3) The ordinary rule is that an enquiry before the arbitrator is assimilated as near as may be to the proceedings on a trial in the Courts. Therefore if the parties are not given notice of any meeting at which they should appear and represent their case or are not given a fair and reasonable opportunity to prove their case that would amount to misconduct on the part of the arbitrators.[6] But the omission to give notice of a meeting to a party who had, prior to such meeting, notified to the arbitrator his withdrawal from the submission, does not invalidate the award.[7] The arbitrators can make an ex parte award if the parties do not attend the hearing after receipt of sufficient notice.[8]

(4) The refusal of an arbitrator to examine witnesses produced by either party is misconduct within the meaning of this paragraph.[9] In order to impeach an award on this ground it must be shown that a witness was distinctly tendered to the arbitrator.[10] But it is not misconduct to refuse to admit evidence which was unnecessary and which would not have in any way helped or affected the decision.[11]

(5) An arbitrator ought not to hear or receive evidence, oral or documentary, from one side in the absence of the other.[12] It has, however, been held by the High Court of Madras that there is no misconduct where an opportunity was given to the other side of meeting and answering such evidence.[12-a] Similarly if the arbitrator takes evidence in the absence of the parties with their consent[13] or where one of the parties deliberately absents himself from the hearing[14] the award made thereafter is not bad for misconduct.

(7) An arbitrator who makes private inquiries and bases his award on such information which the parties had no opportunity to check, is guilty of legal misconduct.[16] But where the parties agree to be bound by the decision of an arbitrator in whatsoever manner he might see fit to arrive thereat, the award will not be bad if based on private enquiries of the arbitrator.[17] selected only because of his personal knowledge of the matters in dispute,[20] it is not misconduct on the part of the arbitrator to import into the consideration of the case his own personal knowledge.

(9) An arbitrator has no authority to delegate his functions to a stranger[21] except the performance of acts of a merely ministerial character.[22]

It is difficult to prescribe in general terms the precise length to which an arbitrator may go in seeking outside advice upon matters of law. Where he merely takes advice upon the general rules of law bearing upon the case and does not leave to an outsider the burden of deciding any issue in the case instead of exercising his own judgment thereon, it cannot be said that the award is vitiated by misconduct.[23] In such cases "it would be prudent and discreet for arbitrators when they desire to put themselves on the best footing of information as to matters of law, to ask all the parties to be present when they communicate with any gentleman whom they may see upon that subject".[24]

(10) Where an arbitrator is indebted to one of the parties at the time of reference or becomes indebted after the reference[25] or has a personal interest in the subject-matter of the dispute[26] or where he has come to know of the facts of the case in the capacity of an advisor of one of the parties[27] and where such fact is not disclosed to the other party the award is vitiated by misconduct. But a pleader is not incompetent to be an arbitrator simply because he was engaged by one of the parties as his pleader on some former occasions.[28]

(11) The reason is that it is the duty of the arbitrator to see that the proceedings are conducted with reasonable diligence and not doing so is a failure in his ordinary duties as an arbitrator. Where an award is made after a delay of five years, it will amount to misconduct unless the delay is properly explained.[29] But where delay in making an award is caused by the voluntary absence of one of the parties that party cannot impugn the validity of the award on the ground of delay.[30]

(12) Where the decision of an arbitrator is perverse, it amounts to misconduct on the part of the arbitrator.[31]

(13) Where one of the arbitrators is guilty of misconduct in having accepted an illegal gratification from one of the parties, the award ought to be set aside in its entirety, inasmuch as it is difficult to say how far the other arbitrators were influenced by the biassed and interested opinion of one of them.[32]

See also Note 8, infra, and the undermentioned cases.[33]

7. Acquiescence in acts amounting to misconduct.—The principles mentioned in Note 6, ante in relation to the various instances of misconduct must be understood subject to the qualification that the parties may agree that a reference may be conducted in a particular way.[1] It is also well settled that an objection to the irregular or improper conduct of an arbitrator may be waived by the parties either expressly or by their conduct provided the party waiving it has full knowledge of the defect.[2] This is based on the principle that Courts will not permit a party to lie by or act in an indecisive manner so as to obtain the benefit of the award if it is in his favour and endeavour to set it aside if it is not.[3] Thus where one of several arbitrators is absent at some of their meetings and a party participates in subsequent proceedings without objecting to the irregularity[4] or where the arbitrators examine the plaintiff's witnesses in the absence of the parties and the defendant who is aware of this makes no protest at that time or later on[5], the party will be deemed to have waived his right to object to the award.

A stipulation in an agreement of reference precluding the parties from impeaching the validity of the award is within the mischief of S. 28 of the Indian Contract Act and will not, therefore, prevent the Court from setting aside the award on any of the grounds mentioned in this paragraph.[6] The reason is that the grounds mentioned in this paragraph "suggest the requisites of a valid agreement as well as of a valid award."[7]

8. Acts not amounting to misconduct.—In Andrews v. Mitchell[1] Lord Halsbury observed as follows: "We must not insist upon too minute observance of the regularity of forms among persons who naturally by their education or by their opportunities cannot be supposed to be very familiar with legal procedure, and may accordingly make slips in what is mere matter of form without any interference with the substance of their dicisions." Courts will not, therefore, set aside an award for misconduct of the arbitrators unless there has been something radically wrong and vicious in the proceedings before the arbitrators.[2]

The following are some instances of acts that do not amount to misconduct:—

(1) It is not a valid objection to an award that the arbitrators have not acted in strict conformity with the rules of evidence.[3]

Para. 15, Note 8.

Thus the honest though mistaken admission by an arbitrator of a document in violation of a rule of evidence introduced pro hac vice (for the occasion) would not be a ground for setting aside an award.[4] Communications between parties in the course of negotiations between them are inadmissible in evidence. This rule of law based upon grounds of public policy and convenience is as binding on arbitrators as on Courts. But if a party does not object to such evidence being received on this ground, it cannot later on be made a ground for setting aside the award.[5]

(2) If a party offers to abide by the oath of the opposite party, the arbitrator can make his award accordingly.[6]

(3) It is generally desirable that an arbitrator should make and retain for subsequent use, if necessary, notes of the proceedings before him. But the absence of such notes is not a ground for setting aside the award and especially if the party objecting did not make any protest until after the awards was made.[7]

(4) Until an award is finally published the arbitrator has a right to reconsider the award he has already made.[8] But once it is published his authority is exhausted. He is functus officio and has no power thereafter to correct or modify the award.[9]

(5) When a cause or matter in difference is referred to an arbitrator, whether a lawyer or a layman, he is constituted the sole and final Judge of all questions both of law and of fact.[10] Therefore, Courts will not sit as Courts of appeal to consider the correctness of an award on the merits in respect of matters of fact or even of law.[11] An error in calculation in the award, unless so palpable and gross as to be strong evidence of misconduct, is no ground for interference by the Court.[12] But the committing of a mistake in law and letting it be visible on the face of the award is a form of judicial misconduct.[13] . See also Note 6 to Para. 14.

(6) An award need not be a reasoned judicial decision and the arbitrators need not even give their reasons for their conclusion.[14]

(7) An award made by the arbitrators which merely embodies a compromise arrived at before them by the parties is not invalid.[15] The reason is that such a proceeding is as much an adjudication of the case as a decree of a Court founded on a compromise.

9. Evidence of arbitrator.—An arbitrator selected by the parties comes within the general obligation of being bound to give evidence when called as a witness in proceedings to enforce or set aside an award. He may be examined upon the course of procedure which he has adopted, the material which he has utilised in arriving at his decision and as to every matter of fact with reference to the making of the award, so as to put the Court in possession of the history of the litigation up to the time of his proceeding to make the award. But a party can go no further and cannot examine him as to why and how he arrived at a particular decision and scrutinise his decision on matters within his jurisdiction and on which his decision is final.[1]

10. "Fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed".—"In cases of arbitration where a person is appointed by two parties to exercise judicial duties, there should be uberrima fides[1] on the part of all the parties concerned in regard to his selection and appointment and every disclosure which might, in the least, affect the minds, of those who are proposing to submit their dispute to the arbitrament of any particular individual, as regards his selection and fitness for the post ought to be made, so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made."[1-a] Thus, where the arbitrator is the retained pleader of one of the parties,[2] or is related to him[3] or is interested in the subject-matter of the dispute[4] and such fact is not disclosed by that party to the other side, the award made by the arbitrator is liable to be set aside under Clause (b) of this paragraph.

11. Award made after order superseding arbitration.—If the power of the arbitrator is revoked by the Court passing an order superseding the arbitration, "the arbitrators have no longer seisin of the reference, and

Where an award was not made in time and consequently the reference to arbitration was cancelled, the Court has no power to look at the award subsequently made and base its judgment on it, as if it were the report of a commissioner.[2]

12. Award made after the expiry of the period allowed by the Court.—It has been already mentioned in Note 1, ante that S. 521 of the old Code after setting out the grounds on which an award could be set aside in Clauses (a), (b) and (c) provided that "no award shall be valid unless made within the time allowed by the Court". It was, therefore, held under that Code that an award made after the expiry of the period allowed was null and void, that is to say, there was no award on which the Court could make a decree.[1]

The effect of the alteration made in this paragraph is that an award made out of time is not per se a nullity, but only affords a ground or reason for setting aside the award if the parties so desire to assert their rights.[2] If no application is made to set aside the award on that ground or if an application is made and refused, the award becomes final.[3] As to appeals against decrees based on awards made out of time see notes to Para. 16.

13. "Being otherwise invalid".—S. 521 of the old Code did not contain the words "or being otherwise invalid." It was held under that Code that an objection to an award could not be taken under S. 521 on the ground that the award was invalid for any reason other than those mentioned in that section.[1] The effect of the change made in this paragraph is that an objection to an award on the ground that it is invalid for any cause whatever must be taken in the Court in which the award is filed and if no objection is there taken or if it is made and disallowed, the award becomes final and cannot be challenged subsequently.[2] See also notes to Para. 16.

Para. 15, Note 13.

An award made otherwise than in accordance with the authority conferred by the order upon the arbitrators is an award which is "otherwise invalid" and which may accordingly be set aside by the Court under this paragraph.[3] Thus where the arbitrators treat a person who is not a party to the suit which has been referred to them, as a party to it and decide disputes between parties to the suit or any of them and such person, the arbitrators exceed their jurisdiction and the award is invalid within the meaning of this paragraph.[4] Similarly where the arbitrators go beyond the scope of the submission and decide matters outside the scope of the suit, the Court will be justified in setting aside the award as invalid.[5] It has been held in the undermentioned case[6] that such an award cannot be treated partly as one made on a reference through Court and partly as an award by private agreement. But where simultaneously with the order of reference, the parties agree to refer to the same arbitrators matters outside the suit and separate awards are made and it appears that the view of the arbitrators in the latter award could not have influenced their minds in deciding the former, the award is not vitiated.[7]

There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether an award can be challenged under this paragraph on the ground that the order of reference is itself invalid. The High Court of Calcutta has held that the words "being otherwise invalid" in Clause (c) of sub-S. (1) of this paragraph refer to the invalidity of the kind mentioned in the preceding sentences of the said clauses and that, therefore, a ground of objection which challenges the validity of the order of reference is not a ground which may be put forward under this paragraph.[8] The High Court of Allahabad while expressing conflicting opinions as to whether the words should be construed ejusdem generis with those previously stated,[9] has held that an objection as to the validity of the reference is not an objection within this paragraph[10] But the High Court of

Para. 15, Notes 13—15.

Lahore has held that the doctrine of ejusdem generis cannot be invoked to restrict the full and natural meaning of the phrase "or being otherwise invalid" and that an award can be challenged on the ground that the reference is invalid as not having been agreed to by all the parties.[11]

The High Court of Madras has also held that the words are not ejusdem generis with the other cases mentioned in this paragraph, but are meant to include all cases of invalidity on grounds other than those mentioned and that, therefore, an award is invalid if a minor who is a party to the arbitration is not properly represented in the proceedings.[12]

14. Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order overruling objections to an award.[1] Nor does an appeal lie from an order setting aside an award under this paragraph[2] except in the case provided for in S. 104, sub-S. (1), Clause (a).

Where a Court sets aside an award under this paragraph and thereafter decides the suit on the merits, the Court of appeal can, on appeal from the decree in the suit, inquire into the propriety or otherwise of the order setting aside the award.[3] See S. 105, ante. But where an order superseding an award is confirmed in appeal in a case coming under S. 104, Clause (a), the Court hearing the appeal from the decree in the suit is precluded from re-opening the question of supersession of the award.[4]

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an order made by a Judge of the High Court, in the exercise of original jurisdiction, refusing to set aside an award is a "judgment" within the meaning of Clause 15 of the Letters Patent and that an appeal lies therefrom to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction.[5] See notes to S. 104.

15. Revision.—No revision lies to the High Court under S. 115, against the order of the lower Court refusing to set aside an award on any of the grounds mentioned in this Paragraph merely because the lower Court has proceeded on an erroneous view.[1] Nor is an order setting aside an award under this Paragraph open to revision.[2] The reason is that the order is not the decision of a "case" within the meaning of S. 115; and, moreover, the applicant has got another remedy of challenging the order in an appeal against the decree in the suit if ultimately the suit is decided against him. See Note 14, ante. But where the ground for revision is the misinterpretation by the Court of the agreement of reference[3] or where an award is set aside on very inadequate grounds[4] or where the Court refuses to hear a valid objection properly raised before it,[5] the order is open to revision under S. 115.

The High Court of Allahabad has held in the undermentioned case[6] that where an award is set aside on the ground that the reference to arbitration ought not to have been made, the order setting aside the award is without jurisdiction and that therefore a revision lies to the High Court.

Judgment to be according to award.

P. 16. [S. 522.] (1) Where the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for re-consideration in manner aforesaid, and no application has been made to set aside the award, or the Court has refused such application, the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired[3], proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award.

(2) Upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with the award.

Decree on award in the absence of the defendant—Whether an ex parte decree. See Note 2, Pt. (3).

1. Legislative changes.—

1. The words "or if the award has been submitted to it in the form of a special case, according to its own opinion on such case" which occurred after the word "award" at the end of sub-S. (1) have been omitted. S. 104, Cl. (b) now gives a right of appeal against an order on an award stated in the form of a special case.[1] See also Notes to Para. 11.
2. The words "and shall be enforced in manner provided in this Code for the execution of decrees" which occurred in S. 522 of the old Code after the word 'followed' in sub-S. (2) have been omitted.

2. Pronounce judgment according to the award.—Where the Court sees no ground to remit the award under Para. 14 and where no application has been made to set aside the award or where such application has been refused, the Court has no option but to pronounce judgment according to the award.[1] Where, however, any portion of the award deals with matters outside the scope of the suit, the Court should not embody such portion of the award in its decree.[2]

It is not necessary that the judgment should be pronounced in the presence of the parties. Where, therefore, the defendant does not file any application to set aside the award, and the Court thereupon pronounces judgment in accordance with the award as it is bound to do, the decree which follows thereon is not an ex parte decree even though the defendant is absent at the time the decree is passed.[3] Where an application to set aside such a decree is refused the order is not appealable under O. 43, R. 1, Cl. (d).[4]

Where an application to set aside an award is dismissed for default, an application to restore the same is maintainable notwithstanding that a decree is passed in the meanwhile.[5]

3. "After the time for making such application has expired."—An application to set aside an award must, under Art. 158 of the Limitation Act[1] be made within ten days of the time when notice of the filing of the award is "given" to the parties.[2] A notice is "given" to the parties where the parties actually receive the same.[3] A mere direction to issue notice is not equivalent to the "giving" of notice within the meaning of the article.[4] S. 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to such applications and the Court cannot excuse the delay in the presentation thereof.[5] S. 12 of the Limitation Act will, however, apply, and, in computing the period of ten days, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the award can be deducted.[6]

4. Finality of decree in accordance with the award.—An award on a reference made through the intervention of the Court becomes final where the Court sees no cause to make a remittal under Para. 14 and where no application has been made to set aside the award under Para. 15 or where such application has been refused. Objections relating to matters antecedent and leading up to the award, cannot, therefore, be raised after the award becomes final. In fact the Court is bound to pronounce judgment in accordance with the award and pass a decree following it.[1] In order to give effect to the general principle of finality of awards,[2] it is declared by sub-Para. (2) of this Paragraph, that no appeal shall lie from "such decree", i.e., a decree following a judgment which is in accordance with the award.[3] Where, therefore, a decree is in accordance with the award no appeal will lie against it on the ground that the Court has erroneously remitted[4] or refused to remit[5] the award under Para. 14 or on the ground that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct.[6]

But the prohibition as to appeal will apply only where the decree, though in accordance with the award, follows upon a judgment "so pronounced", i.e., pronounced after the expiry of the period of limitation for making an application under Para. 15. It has accordingly been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[7] Calcutta[8] and Rangoon[9] and by the Chief Court of Punjab[10] that where a decree is passed before the expiry of such period, an appeal is not barred by this Paragraph. High Court of Madras, one case holding that an appeal does lie,[11] others holding that it does not[12] and a third class of cases holding that a revision will lie in such cases, thus impliedly, negativing the existence of a right of appeal.[13] According to the High Court of Bombay no appeal will lie in such cases but a revision may lie.[14] The Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Oudh[15] and Sind[16] have also held that the High Court can interfere in revision in such a case. It is submitted that the view that an appeal lies is correct.

Suppose now that the parties accept the award filed in Court and agree that a decree may be passed in terms of the award; has the Court power to pass the decree without waiting for the expiry of the period prescribed by Art. 158 of the Limitation Act? The Chief Court of Punjab[17] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[18] have held that the decree so passed is valid, the reason being that it is, in fact, a decree by consent of parties. The High Court of Madras[19] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[20] have, on the other hand, held that such a procedure is without jurisdiction and that the Court has no power to pass a decree even if an application to set aside the award has been disposed of before that time. It is submitted that the former view is correct. The object of waiting till the expiry of the limitation period is only to enable the parties to come in with their objections to the award, if any, and where such parties themselves agree not to object, there is no reason why the Court should wait till the expiry of the period before pronouncing judgment.

5. Finality of decrees not in accordance with the award.—An appeal will lie from a decree based on an award where it is in excess of the award or is not in accordance with the award.[1] Thus, where the decree allows payment of the amount due by instalments[2] or interest[3] or costs[4] not granted by the award, the decree is not in accordance with the award and an appeal will, therefore, lie. An appeal will lie also where a decree is based partly on an award and partly on the Court's findings.[5] But the mere fact that the judgment is in excess of the award will not give a right of appeal if the decree is in accordance with the award.[6]

When an award is modified under Para. 12, ante, the only award according to which judgment can be pronounced is the modified award. Hence an appeal will not lie against a decree based on a modified award, though it may not be in accordance with the original award.[7] The contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases[8] is, it is submitted, not sound on principle.

Where an appeal lies against a decree which is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, the appellant is not entitled to address the Court on all points which were raised before the lower Court. His appeal would lie only in so far as the decree and the award differ[9] and his attack must be confined to the legality of the decree as compared with the award.[10]

6. Appeal against decree based upon invalid award.—Under the old Code prior to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan,[1] it was held that S. 522, presupposed a valid and legal award and that, therefore, an appeal lay against a decree based upon an invalid award.[1-a] Thus it was held that an appeal lay in the following cases:—

(1) Where the reference to arbitration was impungned on the ground that some of the parties had not consented thereto.[2]

(2) Where the award was made out of time.[3]

(3) Where the genuineness of the award was disputed.[4]

(4) Where the fact that the arbitrator was the retained pleader of the plaintiff was not disclosed to the defendant.[5]

(5) Where one of the arbitrators had not concurred in the award.[6]

(6) Where one of the arbitrators signed the award after the same had been filed in Court.[7]

In the Privy Council decision mentioned above[8] where the award was challenged on the ground that the minor defendant's guardian had agreed to the reference without the leave of the Court and also on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrators, their Lordships held that no appeal lay against a decree based on the award and observed as follows:—"Their Lordships would be doing violence to the plain language and the obvious intention of the Code, if they were to hold that an appeal lies from a decree pronounced under S. 522, except in so far as the decree may be in excess of or not in accordance with the award."

As has been already seen in Note 13 to Para. 15, the introduction of the words "or being otherwise invalid" in that Paragraph, makes it clear that the intention of the legislature is that objections to the award on the ground of its invalidity must be decided by the Court making the reference and that an appeal against the decree, on such ground is incompetent.[9]

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that this Paragraph contemplates an award made in a case where there is a valid reference and that, therefore, where the validity of the reference is itself attacked an appeal against the decree is not barred.[10] But the High Courts of Allahabad,[11]

Bombay[12] and Lahore[13] and the Chief Court of Oudh[14] have taken the contrary view. The decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[15] are conflicting. It is submitted that the correctness of the Calcutta view is open to question in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan.[15-a]

It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that the rule prohibiting an appeal against a decree based upon an award does not apply to a case where the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.[16] The High Court of Madras has, on the other hand, held that the remedy in such a case is by way of revision.[17] It is submitted that the Lahore view is not correct. A right of appeal is expressly negatived by this Paragraph except in the circumstances specified and the general principle is that unless a right of appeal is given by statute, it does not exist.

7. Judgment without hearing objections to award—Appeal if lies against decree.—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that where a decree is passed in terms of an award without considering the objections raised against it, the award is not in conformity with the provisions of sub-Para. (1), and cannot form the basis of an unappealable decree and that, therefore, an appeal lies against decree passed on such award.[1] The High Courts of Calcutta,[2] Madras[3] and Rangoon[4] and the Chief Court of Punjab[5] have, on the other hand, in such cases interfered by way of revision. The Allahabad view cannot, it is submitted, be accepted as correct.

Where a decree based upon an award is attacked on the ground that a sufficient opportunity was not given to a party to substantiate his objections to the award, it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Lahore that the Court acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and that the decree may be set aside in revision.[6] The High Court of Rangoon has, however, held that an appeal lies in such a case.[7] It is submitted that this view of the Rangoon High Court cannot be accepted as correct.

8. Second appeal.—Where a decree is passed in accordance with an award and an appeal is wrongly entertained against it and the decree is set aside in appeal, does a second appeal lie against the decree of the Lower Appellate Court? The High Courts of Allahabad, Madras and Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur have held that a second appeal lies, the reason being that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court is not one in accordance with the award.[1] But the High Court of Calcutta[2] and the Chief Court of Punjab[3] have interfered, in such cases, by way of revision.

Where a Court of first instance wrongly refuses to pass a decree in accordance with an award and a Court of Appeal reverses the decree of the first Court and passes a decree in accordance with the award, such a decree is, according to the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta and the Chief Court of Oudh, open to second appeal.[4] The reason given is that the provision in sub-S. (2) of this Paragraph applies only where a decree has been pronounced in accordance with the award by the Court making the reference. But the Chief Court of Punjab has held that the decree of the lower appellate Court is entitled to the same finality as that of the first Court and that a second appeal will not lie.[5]

9. Revision.—Sub-section (2) of this Paragraph only prohibits an appeal from a decree based upon an award. But as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan v. Mahomed Hassan, I. L. R. 29 Cal. 167, "in the case of an award revision would be more objectionable than an appeal" and hence an application for revision against a decree in accordance with an award does not lie merely on the ground of the erroneous decision of matter referred to him, a decree passed upon such an award may be set aside in revision.[6]

It has been already discussed in Note 6, ante, whether an appeal lies against a decree based upon an award where the reference to arbitration is itself impugned as being invalid. The High Court of Allahabad has held that such a decree is open to revision on the ground of its being without jurisdiction.[7] But according to the High Court of Lahore and the Chief Court of Oudh no revision lies in such a case.[8]

See also Notes 3, 5, 6 and 7, supra.

10. Binding effect of award.—A judgment and decree passed in accordance with an award may constitute res judicata as much as a judgment and decree which result from the decision of the Court after the matter has been fought to the end.[1] A valid award operates to merge and extinguish all claims covered by the submission and is binding on the parties to the reference even though it has not been made a rule of Court under this Paragraph.[2]

An award does not become ineffectual or invalid as between the parties to the reference, merely because other parties to the suit have not joined in the reference.[3]

A person, who is a stranger to the reference is neither bound by[4] nor can enforce[5] the award.

11. Enforcement of the award.—The only way of enforcing an award made in a reference through Court is to have a decree passed in accordance with it under this Paragraph.[1] Where a decree is passed in terms of an award, the award can be enforced only by way of execution of the decree and no separate suit will lie therefor.[2] Nor will a suit lie to enforce an award which was declared void by the Court in proceedings under Para. 17.[3]

Para. 16, Notes 12—14.

12. Suit to set aside award.—Where an application to set aside an award is refused and a decree is passed in accordance with it, no suit will lie thereafter to set aside the award.[1] But a minor can sue to set aside a decree against him based on award on the ground that the reference to arbitration was made without obtaining the leave of the Court as required by O. 32, R. 7.[2]

13. Court acting as arbitrator.—It has been already seen in Note 22 to Para. 1, ante, that a consent by the parties to abide by the decision of the Court is not such a reference to arbitration as is contemplated by this Schedule. The decision of the Court, in such a case, however, operates as a consent decree and is, therefore, not appealable.[1] In the undermentioned cases[2] it has been held that such a decision is in the nature of an arbitrator's award and hence is not appealable. It is respectfully submitted that though the actual decision in the said cases is right, the reasoning on which they proceed is not correct.

Where the parties agree not to let in evidence but that the Court may make a local inspection, the decision of the Court in the suit is neither a consent decree nor an award and is therefore, appealable.[3]

14. Valuer and arbitrator.—It has been already seen in Note 10 to Para. 1 that a reference to arbitration implies the existence of some matter in difference which has actually arisen at the time of the reference. Thus, where the intention of the parties is that the person to whom the matter is referred should hold an inquiry in the nature of a judicial enquiry, and hear the respective cases of the parties, and decide upon evidence laid before him, the case is one of arbitration. But where a person is appointed to ascertain some matter for the purpose of preventing differences from arising, not of settling them when they have arisen, the case is not one of arbitration.[1] No judgment could, therefore, be given under this Paragraph on the basis of the valuator's decision.[2]

In the suit a consent order was made that C was to purchase R's interest in the property at a price to be settled by certain referees. It was held by the appellate Court that the referees were valuators rather than

ORDER OF REFERENCE OR AGREEMENTS TO REFER.

Para. 17.

Application to file in Court agreement to refer to arbitration.

P. 17. [S. 523.] (1) Where any persons agree in writing that any difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, the parties to the agreement, or any of them, may apply to any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, that the agreement be filed in Court.

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit[8] between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant, if the application has been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) On such application being made, the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all the parties to the agreement, other than the applicants, requiring such parties to show cause, within the time specified in the notice, why the agreement should not be filed.

(4) Where no sufficient cause is shown,[9] the Court shall order the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement[10] or, if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, the Court may appoint an arbitrator.

Paragraph whether applicable to cases under Arbitration Act. See Note 2.

1. Legislative changes:—

1. The words "of any person named in the agreement or to be appointed by any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates'' which occurred after the words "shall be referred to arbitration'' in the corresponding section of the old Code have been omitted in Cl. 1 of this Paragraph.

2. Clause 4 of this Paragraph replaces the following words which occurred in the old Code:—''If no sufficient cause be shown, the Court may cause the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference thereon, and may also nominate the arbitrator when he is not named therein and the parties cannot agree as to the nomination.''

It was held under the old Code that an agreement in which the arbitrator was not named could not be filed under S. 523.[1] Under the present Code, in view of the aforementioned changes, it is not necessary that the arbitrator should be named in the agreement.[2]

2. Scope and applicability of the Paragraph.—This and Paras. 18 and 19, infra, deal with the second class of cases of arbitration referred to by the Judicial Committee in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan, (I.L.R. 29 Cal. 167 P. C.), viz., to references to arbitration without having recourse to litigation.

The provisions of this Paragraph apply only to cases where in pursuance of the agreement to refer, the arbitrators have not functioned and made their award. Where the award has actually been delivered, the proper course is to take proceedings under Para. 20 to enforce the award.[1] Similarly, where an application is filed under this Paragraph but before it is disposed of, the arbitrators deliver their award, the application is rendered infructuous, and the remedy of the parties is to apply under Para. 20.[2] A mere filing of an application under this Paragraph does not oust the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to give his award.[3]

Arbitration in a pending suit stands on a different footing from an agreement made out of Court to refer a dispute to arbitration. In a pending suit the authority of the arbitrator is derived from the order of the Court making the reference, and if this order is defective there is no proper reference and consequently there can be no legal award. On the other hand in a private reference it is the agreement entered into between the parties which confers jurisdiction on the arbitrators to deal with the dispute. In such a case if proceedings are taken under this Paragraph and a reference secured under Cl. 4 thereof, it is not this reference which constitutes the arbitrator as a private tribunal. It is merely the machinery by which the tribunal already constituted by the agreement of parties is made to function.[4]

The provisions of this Paragraph are permissive and do not oblige a party to apply under this Paragraph.[5] It is open to a party to the agreement to file a suit in Court notwithstanding the agreement and the only remedy of the other party if he wishes to stand by the agreement is to apply under Para. 18, infra, (for further discussion, see Para. 18). The provisions of this and the following two Paragraphs do not apply to cases governed by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899. (See S. 3 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899 and S. 89 of the Code). See also the following cases.[6]

If in conciliation proceedings under Chapter 6 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879, the parties agree to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration, the conciliator appointed under that Chapter must, under S. 45 of the Act, forward the agreement to the Court having jurisdiction in the matter and the Court must thereupon proceed in the manner provided by this Paragraph and Paragraph 19, infra.

3. Agreement to refer matters in a pending litigation.—The provisions of this Paragraph cover only cases where parties, without recourse to litigation, agree to refer their differences to arbitration.[1] If parties to a litigation who desire to refer their differences to arbitration, desire to avail themselves of the provisions of this Schedule, they can do so only under Paras. 1 to 16 thereof.[2] In other words, an agreement to refer made by the parties to a litigation without the intervention of the Court cannot be recognised under this Schedule[3] and cannot be filed under this Paragraph as if it was an agreement to refer without recourse to litigation.[4] If an award has been passed on such a reference it cannot be made the basis of a proceeding under Para. 20.[5] As to whether such an agreement can be recognised, independent of this Schedule, as an adjustment of the suit under O. 23, R. 3, there is a conflict of opinion for which see Note 9 to O. 23, R. 3, ante.[5-a]

Where, however, after an agreement to refer was entered into in a pending suit, the suit itself was withdrawn an application filed under this Paragraph subsequent to such withdrawal is not incompetent and an award made in pursuance of the same is valid.[6] So also an agreement to refer relating to matters not involved in the suit is perfectly valid, though entered into pending suit. Thus where during the pendency of probate proceedings the parties agreed to refer to arbitration the question of the division of the estate, and the agreement left untouched the powers of the Court to issue probate, and the arbitrators also did not deal with that question, it was held that the agreement and the award thereon were valid.[7]

4. Agreement to refer future differences to arbitration.—See Notes 2 and 10 to Para. 1, ante.

5. Agreement must relate to matters within Court's jurisdiction.—Before an application can be filed under this Paragraph it is essential that the agreement to refer should relate to matters which the Court is competent to try and has jurisdiction to pass a final decree upon. Thus, where an agreement relates to the partition of revenue paying land, it cannot be filed under this Paragraph as the civil Court has no jurisdiction to partition the revenue.[1] Where an agreement relates to matters partly within and partly beyond the jurisdiction of the Court it has been held that the Court cannot strike out that portion of the agreement beyond its jurisdiction in order to give itself jurisdiction unless the parties agree to this being done with a view to the Court proceeding under this Paragraph.[2]

6. Agreement relating to appointment of Muttawalli.—The succession to the trusteeship of a public trust or charity is a matter affecting the public interests and a dispute regarding it cannot be referred to arbitration.[1] It has been held by the High Court of Madras that an agreement to refer to arbitration, even if relating to a public office is not necessarily unlawful or opposed to public policy but must be scrutinised by the Court for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is in violation of the trusts of the institution or affects adversely the interests of the public.[2]

7. Agreement to refer must be in writing.—It is essential that the agreement to refer should be in writing before it can be filed under this Paragraph.[1]

8. Shall be numbered and registered as a suit.—See Note 12 to Para. 20, infra.

9. "Where no sufficient cause is shown."—Agreements to refer to arbitration stand on the same footing as all other lawful agreements by which the parties are bound to the terms of what they have agreed to, and from which i.e., the agreement to refer they cannot retire,unless the scope and object of the agreement cannot be executed, or unless it be shown that manifest injustice will be the consequence of binding the parties to the contract.[1] Where therefore no "sufficient cause"[1-a] is shown against the agreement, this Paragraph provides that the agreement shall be ordered to be filed. All grounds on which a contract will be voidable such as fraud, misrepresentation, etc., which will enable a party to avoid a contract or which renders a contract unenforceable against a party will constitute "sufficient cause" against filing the agreement under this Paragraph. Thus where the agreement to refer is shown to be vitiated by fraud or mistake[2] or by misrepresentation[3] or is not consented to by all the parties[4] the Court will decline to file the agreement. Similarly, where an agreement to refer is entered into by the de facto guardian of a Mahomedan minor it cannot be filed under this Paragraph as such guardian has no authority in law to act for the minor.[5] So also where the conduct of the parties shows that they have abandoned and cancelled the agreement to refer, the Court will refuse to order the same to be filed.[6] An agreement, the submission under which has been revoked for good cause cannot be filed under this Paragraph.[7]

10. "Arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement."—A submission to arbitration must be strictly construed as it deprives the party to the submission, of the right, which he has under the common law, to have the dispute to which the submission relates decided by a Court of law.[1] The jurisdiction of the Court to order a reference under this

Para 17.
10—11.

Paragraph is derived from the agreement of the parties and the Court must refer, in accordance with the terms of the agreement.[2] If it fails to do so it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.[3] Thus, where the agreement is to refer to the arbitration of two European merchants of Karachi, the Court has no power under this Paragraph to order a reference to an Indian merchant of Amritsar.[4] Where according to the terms of an agreement to refer, an umpire should be appointed from out of seven persons named, the Court cannot appoint as an umpire, a person who is not one of the seven persons so named.[4-a] Similarly, where the agreement is to refer to three arbitrators, the Court has no jurisdiction to add a direction that in case of disagreement among them, the opinion of the majority should prevail. There can be no implied agreement in such cases to be bound by the decision of the majority.[5]

An order under the last portion of Para. 4, ante, directing a party to nominate an arbitrator, cannot be passed before the agreement is actually filed under the earlier portion.[6]

11. Death or refusal of arbitrator to act.—Where an arbitrator dies or refuses to act subsequent to the agreement to refer and the agreement does not contain any provision for such a contingency, has the Court power to appoint a new arbitrator? There are two provisions in this schedule empowering the Court to appoint an arbitrator:—

(a) Under Cl. 4 of this Paragraph where the agreement does not contain any provision for the appointment of arbitrators and the parties cannot agree thereto.

(b) Under Para. 5 of this schedule read with Para. 19, infra.

As to the power of the Court to make an appointment under Cl. 4 of this Paragraph the High Court of Allahabad[1] has expressed the view that the expression "if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree" covers also a case where there has been a provision for a particular arbitrator who is either dead or has retired. If he has died or refuses to act it is as though there where no provisions. But this opinion is merely an obiter dictum and the High Court of Bombay[2] has dissented from this view and has held that Cl. 4 is not open to such a construction.

(2) Vishwas Balwant Davaie v. Bhalchandra Ganesh Thakar, 1931 Bom 529 (531): 33 Bom L R 1022: 134 Ind Cas 733.

As to the power of the Court to proceed under Para. 5 and make an appointment it must be noted that that Paragraph applies to agreements without recourse to litigation only by virtue of Para. 19 by which the provisions of Para. 5 can be applied by the Court "only so far as they are consistent with the agreement". There is a diversity of judicial opinion in the application of Para. 5 and in order to understand and appreciate the decisions they may be considered under two heads, viz.:—

(1) Where the death or refusal of the arbitrator takes place subsequent to the agreement but before it is filed into Court under this Paragraph.

(2) Where such death or refusal takes place subsequent to the filing under Cl. 4.

In cases falling under the first head, it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta[3] and Madras[4] and the Chief Courts of Punjab[5] and Lower Burma[6] that the agreement becomes incapable of performance on the death or refusal of the arbitrator and that the Court cannot order such agreement to be filed under this Paragraph. Thus, where an agreement is to refer to the arbitration of three specified persons, and one of them dies pending arbitration proceedings, the Court cannot order the agreement to be filed under this Paragraph and direct the remaining arbitrators to act or appoint a new arbitrator in his place as it will not be consistent with the provisions of the agreement to do so.[7] The High Court of Allahabad[8] has, on the other hand, held that where an arbitrator refuses to act pending arbitration proceedings, the Court can, on a subsequent application under this Paragraph appoint a new arbitrator. The decision proceeds on the view that a party acquiescing in the arbitrators commencing proceedings should be deemed to have waived his right to object to the opposite party obtaining later on an order of reference under this Paragraph.

In cases falling under the second head, the power of the Court to appoint a new arbitrator has been assumed in the following cases.[9] But it is conceived that even in such cases the power of the Court to make a new appointment should be consistent with the terms of the agreement.

12. Revocation of reference to arbitrator.—Under the common law of England, a party to a submission might at any time before the award was made, revoke the authority of the arbitrator, the reason being that the arbitrator was, in contemplation of law merely an agent appointed by the parties to decide the matter in dispute between them and his authority was therefore revocable by either of his principals.[1] This has not been followed in this country.[2] As pointed out by the Privy Council in Pestonjee v. Manockjee & Co., 12 Moo. Ind. App. 112, at p. 130, no party to an agreement to refer to arbitration can, after a reference has been made, revoke the submission unless for good cause and a mere arbitrary revocation of the authority is not permitted.[3] The following have been held to be "sufficient cause" for revoking a submission to arbitration:—

(1) the fact that the arbitrator is colluding with the opposite party.[4]

(2) the fact that the arbitrator is discovered to have been acting as a mukhtear for one of the parties without remuneration or to be indebted to such party.[5]

(3) unreasonable delay in the conduct of the proceedings before the arbitrators, not caused by the party seeking to revoke the submission.[6]

(4) relationship of the arbitrator to one of the parties, unknown to the other.[7]

The following do not constitute "sufficient cause" for revocation of a submission:—

(1) Delay in the conduct of the proceedings, where such delay is caused by the very party seeking to revoke.[8]

(2) The fact that one of the arbitrators figured as a witness for the prosecution in a security proceeding against the party seeking to revoke.[9]

1. Scope and object of the paragraph.—This paragraph must be read with S. 28 of the Contract Act, 1872, S. 21 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, and Para. 22 of this Schedule. The general rule as declared by S. 28 of the Contract Act is that every agreement by which any party thereto is restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of the contract by the usual legal proceedings in ordinary tribunals is void. An agreement to refer future disputes or an agreement in writing to refer existing disputes to arbitration has been declared by the said section to be an exception to the general rule. Such agreements are therefore valid and binding on the parties. They are, however, not specifically enforceable (S. 21 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877). But if a party to the agreement sues in respect of the matter agreed to be referred to arbitration, the Court may stay the suit under this Paragraph and thus enable the defendant to apply under Para. 17 to carry on the arbitration proceedings as under the agreement. Before the present Code, the existence of such an agreement could be pleaded as a bar to the suit[1] under S. 21 of the Specific Relief Act. That action, so far as it enabled such a plea in bar to be raised, has now been declared by Para. 22, infra, to be not applicable to cases governed by this Schedule.[1-a]

Para. 18. Notes 1—4.

The object of this Paragraph is to provide against the contumacious conduct of a plaintiff who had agreed to refer a particular matter to arbitration but wants to resile from it; but the discretion is in the Court to stay the suit or not, the paramount idea being that a tribunal constituted by the parties should not come in conflict or usurp the function of the tribunal which the Sovereign has provided.[2]

2. "Where any party .. institutes any suit."—This para. is restricted to cases in which a suit is instituted after an agreement to refer to arbitration has been entered into. An agreement to refer, entered into pending suit, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court; nor can it afford a valid ground for staying the suit under this Paragraph.[1]

3. Application for stay of suit must be made at the earliest opportunity.—The power vested in the Court to stay a suit under this Paragraph is discretionary and can be exercised only on an application made for that purpose at or before the settlement of issues,[1] cf. the provisions of S. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act which require that the application should be made at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings.

4. Effect of award made subsequent to suit in pursuance of agreement to refer before suit.—Where no application for stay is made within proper time or an application is made and dismissed the award made subsequently and pending the suit is invalid. When once the suit is filed, the jurisdiction of the arbitrators ceases, and they become functus officio.[1] The leading case on the point is the decision in Doleman and Sons v. Orsett Corporation, [(1912) 3 K. B. 257] which has been quoted with approval and followed by the High Courts in India. Moulton, L. J., in delivering the judgment in that case observed as follows:—"The law will not enforce the specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration, but if duly appealed to, it has the power in its discretion, to refuse to a party the alternative of having the dispute settled by a Court of Law, and thus to leave him in the position of having no other remedy than to proceed by arbitration. If the Court has refused to stay an action or if the defendant has abstained from asking it to do so, the Court has seisin of the dispute and it is by its decision and by its decision alone, that the rights of the parties are settled. It follows that, in the latter case, the private tribunal, if it has ever come into existence, is functus officio unless the parties agree de novo that the dispute shall be tried by arbitration and that the action itself shall be referred. There cannot be two tribunals, each with the jurisdiction to insist on deciding the rights of the parties and to compel them to accept its decision".

But in order to apply the doctrine that an award made pending suit is invalid, the following conditions must be fulfilled:—

(1) The person instituting the suit must be a party to the agreement to refer.

(2) The party wishing to stay the suit must have the right to apply to the Court to stay it.

(3) The subject-matter of the dispute must be the same before the arbitrator and the Court.[2]

The validity of the agreement entered into prior to the suit is not, however, affected by the institution of the suit and it is only the subsequent award that is invalid. Hence it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that though an award is made subsequent to suit, the Court can nevertheless stay the suit in order to enable the defendant to have the invalid award set aside (under Paras. 20 and 21) and thereafter recommence the arbitration proceedings. Otherwise, a party to the agreement can nullify the entire arbitration proceedings by filing a suit at the last moment when the award is about to be delivered without giving the opponent any time to obtain a stay of the suit.[3]

5. Sufficient cause—Burden of proof.—It is for the plaintiff to show that there is sufficient cause as to why the matter should not be referred to arbitration in accordance with the agreement. The burden is not upon the defendant to show that no such cause exists.[1] (As to what is sufficient cause see Note 9 to Para. 17, supra.)

6. Discretion of Court to stay suit.—The defendant is not entitled as of right to a stay of the suit under this Paragraph. The granting of stay is in the discretion of the Court.[1] The Court will, however, exercise the discretion ordinarily in favour of the stay, for, as observed by Lord Selbourne in Willesford v. Watson.[2] "If parties choose to determine for themselves, that they will have a domestic forum instead of resorting to the ordinary Courts, then since that Act of Parliament, (that is, the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, S. 11, which corresponds to Para. 18 of the Civil Procedure Code) was passed a prima facie duty is cast upon the Courts to act upon such an agreement".

7 Dispute as to agreement to refer—Validity of agreement.—The Court can stay a suit under this Paragraph only when there is a subsisting agreement to refer to arbitration. Where the agreement has become void and inoperative, as for instance, by the death of the arbitrator specified in the agreement, it can afford no valid ground for granting stay under this Paragraph.[1] Similarly where the agreement has been revoked for sufficient cause or is otherwise invalid in law (as where it is vitiated by fraud or mistake), the Court will decline to grant stay.[2]

Where the parties dispute the agreement, the Court should decide as to the truth and validity of the agreement before it proceeds to grant or refuse a stay under this Paragraph.[3] Where the parties have entered into a fresh agreement which materially alters the original agreement containing the arbitration clause, the existence of the original agreement cannot be urged as a ground for stay. But if the fresh agreement merely amounts to an extension of time for the performance of the original contract, it has not the effect of superseding the same so as to invalidate the arbitration clause.[4] Where a contract contains several clauses of which the arbitration clause is one, the Court is not a fortiori bound to stay the suit. Thus, where a seller files a suit upon certain accepted but unpaid bills and there is a clause in the indent by which the buyer is bound to accept and pay at maturity the bills drawn by the seller notwithstanding any objection that the buyer may have regarding any variations in the terms of the indent, the buyer is not entitled to rely on a clause in the indent agreeing to refer the dispute to arbitration. Such a suit is governed by S. 32 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and the Court should not stay the suit under this Paragraph.[5]

In the undermentioned cases[6] it has been held that where a suit is filed impeaching the very agreement containing the arbitration clause, the Court can order a stay of the arbitration proceedings.

8. Removal of stay order.—Where after a stay is granted under this Paragraph one of the arbitrators refuses to act[1] or the defendant neglects to take steps to proceed with the arbitration[2] the plaintiff is entitled to apply for a removal of the order for stay. The Court cannot, however, proceed with the suit without vacating the stay order.

9. Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this Paragraph staying or refusing to stay the suit (vide S. 104 Sub-S. (1), Cl. (e). But an order

ARBITRATION WITHOUT THE INTERVENTION OF A COURT.

Filing award in matter referred to arbitration without intervention of Court.

P. 20. [S. 525.] (1) Where any matter has been referred to arbitration[6] without the intervention of a Court, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award[9] may apply to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award[10] that the award be filed in Court.

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit[12] between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

(3) The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties[13] to the arbitration, other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the award should not be filed.

2. Awards made on arbitration without the intervention of a Court.— A reference to arbitration out of Court originates in a submission which is an agreement between the parties to be bound by the adjudication of their differences or disputes by an arbitrator appointed with their consent.[1-a] On the reference the arbitrator makes an award or an adjudication of the respective rights of the parties. In order to constitute an award, therefore, the following elements are essential:—

(1) There must be a difference or dispute between the parties.[1-b]

(2) There must be a submission to arbitration and a reference thereon to an arbitrator appointed by the parties.

(3) There must be an award by the arbitrator on the points referred to him.

As between the parties to the submission, a valid award is a final adjudication of the disputes between them embraced in the submission, and is conclusive upon the merits of the controversy submitted.[1] It operates, therefore, to merge and extinguish all claims embraced in the submission, and, after an award is made, the submission and award furnish the only basis by which the rights of the parties can be determined and constitute a bar to any action on the original rights of the parties. It is not necessary for the validity of the award that it should be filed or enforced in a Court of law.[2] But if it is desired to enforce the rights created by the award through the Court, the award has to be converted into a judgment of Court on which a decree may be made.[2-a] For this purpose a party in whose favour an award has been made has two course open to him:—

(i) He may proceed by an application under this Paragraph. See Note 3.

(ii) He may file a regular suit to enforce the award. See Note 4.

3. Scope of the Paragraph.—This Paragraph provides for a summary procedure for filing in Courts awards made on arbitration without the intervention of a Court.[1] The procedure is, however, optional[2] and does not preclude the party from bringing a regular suit to enforce the rights created by the award.[3] (See Note 4, infra.) The inquiry under this Paragraph is limited to the conditions specified in Para. 21. (See Note 2 to Para. 21, infra.) While, in a regular suit to enforce the award, it is open to the defendant to attack the award on all possible grounds.[4]

As to whether a proceeding under this Paragraph is res judicata in a subsequent suit to enforce or set aside the award, see Note 27 to S. 11, ante. A refusal to file the award under this Paragraph does not amount to a decree, and therefore does not render the award void or otherwise unenforceable, as against the parties to the award, but leaves the award to have its ordinary legal validity,[5] unless the validity of the award as an award was directly and substantially in issue in such proceeding.[6]

4. Regular suit to enforce the award.—Apart from the procedure under this Paragraph, a regular suit may be brought to enforce the rights under the award. (See Form No. 10, Appendix A to Sch. 1.) It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit to enforce the terms of the award is in essence one for specific performance of the award[1] and must be brought within three years of the date of the award under Art. 113 of the Limitation Act.[1-a] But it has been held by the High Courts of Madras[2] and Allahabad[3] that the question whether a suit to enforce an award is a suit for specific performance of the award would depend upon the nature and purport of the award, and the period of limitation for the suit would also depend upon the nature and purport of the award. It is submitted that the latter view is correct. Where the award directs the performance of a duty or condition and where the performance of such a duty or condition may be specifically enforced under the Specific Relief Act, the suit may be one for specific performance of the award.[4] But where the award settles or declares the title of the parties and a claim is made based on the title so conferred, the suit cannot be called a suit for specific performance of the award any more than is a suit upon a sale-deed, a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale.[4-a] On the same principle it has been held that a suit for recovery of money due under an award is a suit for money and as such cognisable by a Court of Small Causes, even though, in such a suit, the validity of the award may be contested.[5] As to whether a suit, brought after an application to file the award under this Paragraph is dismissed, is barred by the res judicata, see Note 27 to S. 11, ante.

9. "Any person interested in the award."—A person who is not a party to the reference to arbitration and therefore is not bound by the award, cannot enforce the award, even though he may derive an advantage from it.[1]

10. Jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award.—Under the old Code, the application had to be filed in the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction "over the matter to which the award relates".[1] It was held on an interpretation of the words in quotation, that the jurisdiction depended upon the value of the matter to which the arbitration related and not on the value of the matter awarded.[2] The use of the words "having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award" in the present Paragraph makes it clear that the jurisdiction now depends upon the reliefs awarded rather than on the matter originally in dispute.[3] In order to decide whether the Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award, it is necessary to determine whether the Court would have under Ss. 16 to 20 of the Code, jurisdiction to try a regular suit between the parties in which the reliefs claimed are the reliefs granted by the award.[3-a] It is, however, the entire matter dealt with by the award and not merely a particular portion thereof that must be considered in determining the jurisdiction of the Court.[4] Where the award deals with matters partly within the jurisdiction of a Court and partly without it, it cannot be filed under this Paragraph in that Court and no decree can be validly made thereon.[5] Thus an award directing the payment of a sum of money and also declaring the dissolution of a marriage cannot be filed in a Small Cause Court which has no jurisdiction to deal with the question of dissolution of marriages.[6] Similarly, in Ramlal v. Kisan Chandra,[6-a] where the properties in dispute and dealt with by the award, were all outside British India, it was held by the Privy Council that the award could not be filed in a British Indian Court.

Before assuming jurisdiction under this Paragraph the Court has to be satisfied that it has jurisdiction to entertain the application and should, if necessary, take evidence regarding jurisdiction before assuming jurisdiction.[7]

11. Small Cause Court.—Where an award merely directs the payment of money a suit to recover the money is cognisable by a Court of Small Causes.[1]

12. "Shall be numbered and registered as a suit."—It has been seen in Note 5 to S. 2, sub-S. (2), ante, that the word "suit" for the purposes of the Code, means—

(1) any proceeding under the Code which is instituted by the presentation of a plaint, and

(2) any proceeding which, according to any specific provisions of law should be regarded as a suit under the Code.

An application under this Paragraph or under Para. 17 must, therefore, be regarded as a suit for the purpose of the Code, inasmuch as it has to be "numbered and registered as a suit".[1] It has accordingly been held that the provisions of O. 9, R. 13,[2] O. 23, Rr. 1 and 3[3] and O. 38, R. 5[4] can be applied to such applications. But though such an application is a "suit" the order thereon is not a "decree". The reason is that such a decision is appealable as an order under the provisions of S. 104, ante, and is thus excluded from the definition of "decree".[5]

It has, however, been held in the undermentioned cases[6] that an application under Para. 17 or under this Paragraph is not a "suit" at all for the purposes of the Code. It is submitted that this view cannot be accepted as correct.

But an application under Para. 17 or under this Paragraph should be regarded as a suit only for the purposes of the Code. It is not a "suit" within the meaning of the Limitation Act, 1908[7] or of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act[8] or of the Court Fees Act, 1870[8-a] or for the purposes of the taxation of the pleaders' fee on such applications.[9]

13. Notice to parties.—The issue of a notice to the parties under sub-Para. (4) is imperative.[1] The word "parties" is not confined to persons who have actually appeared before the arbitrators. A, B and C agreed that in case of any dispute between them the matter should be referred to the arbitration of persons chosen by each party to the dispute and that in the event of any such party refusing to nominate an arbitrator, the arbitrator nominated by the other party should nominate another arbitrator and the two together should nominate an umpire. Disputes having arisen, A and B called upon C to nominate an arbitrator; C failed to do so and thereupon A and B nominated an arbitrator who chose another arbitrator and they having appointed an umpire, made an award. A applied to file the award in Court.

It was held that C, was a "party" to whom notice should go, although he did not actually appear before the arbitration.[2]

14. Lost award.—See Note 8 to Para. 21, infra.

15. Decision of majority.—Where a dispute is referred to several arbitrators and the agreement of reference does not provide that the decision of the majority shall prevail, an award by the majority of the arbitrators is not valid.[1] The mere fact that an uneven number of arbitrators have been appointed does not show that the parties agreed to be bound by the award of the majority.[2] The Court cannot in such cases appoint an umpire.[3] Even in a case where the parties agree to be bound by the award of the majority, the proceedings will be vitiated unless all the arbitrators take part in the proceedings.[4] As to the validity of a decision by the majority of the arbitrators on a reference pending suit see Note 2 to Para. 4, ante.

16. Parties to reference.—An award binds only the parties making the reference. Where a reference is made by some only of several persons having a common interest, and they have no express authority from the others to act on their behalf also, the latter are not bound by the award.[1] Where one of the parties to a reference is a minor and an application is made to the Court by another party to file the award, the Court, before filing the award, should decide definitely whether the reference was for the benefit of the minor so as to be binding on him.[2]

17. Court-fee.—An application to file an award under this Paragraph is not chargeable with a Court-fee as if it is a suit, but is chargeable only as an application.[1] See also Art. 18, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870.

18. Limitation.—The period of limitation for an application to file an award is six months from the date of the award.[1] (Art. 178, Indian Limitation Act). It has been held that "the date of the award" in Art. 178 really means the date on which the award was published or handed over to the parties and not the date on which it was made or signed.[2] The Court has no power to authority of the arbitrator and that the award must conform to the submission in substance and in form. Subject to this limitation, however, the arbitrator is the sole and final judge of law and fact and the Court will not review the award upon the merits nor constitute itself as a Court of appeal to go into the merits of the matter and to see whether the conclusions arrived at are sound and reasonable.[1]

There is no provision of law which requires the arbitrator to adopt any special procedure in arriving at his award,[2] and the proceedings are not intended to be carried on according to the rules of procedure contained in the Code.[2-a] He is not bound, to make any record of the proceedings[2-b] or to give a reasoned judicial decision.[3] In any inquiry under this paragraph the Court has to satisfy only on the following points:—

(1) that there was a matter in difference between the parties existing at the time of the arbitration (see Note 3, infra).

(2) that there was a valid submission of the matter in difference and a reference thereon to arbitration (see Note. 4).

(3) that the subject-matter of the reference was such as could be lawfully referred to arbitration, and that the Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award (see Notes 5 and 10 to Para. 20, ante).

(4) that an award was made thereon (see Notes 6, 7 and 8): and

(5) that no grounds of objection such as those mentioned in Paras. 14 and 15 have been proved (see Notes 9 and 10.)

The Court should then proceed to give judgment according to the award,[3-a] that is, it should state in the judgment what its construction of the award is as to the rights and interests of the parties,[4] and a decree dealing with the specific rights of the parties should be drawn up.[5] The award should be construed reasonably and in accordance with what may be supposed, under the circumstances of the case, to have been the intention of the arbitrator.[6] Every reasonable presumption should be made in favour of the award being a final and certain termination of the matters in dispute.[7]

3. "Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon".—Under S. 526 of the old Code, it was held by the High Court of Bombay in the cases cited below[1] that the Court had no jurisdiction to enquire into the factum or validity of the submission and award, and if the defendant denied any reference to arbitration, the only course open to the Court was to dismiss the application and refer the parties to a regular suit to enforce the award. But this view was dissented from by the same High Court in a later Full Bench case[2] in which it was held, following the decisions of the other High Courts[3] that the existence and validity of the reference and award was the foundation of jurisdiction of the Court under that section, and that, therefore, the Court ought to decide on evidence whether the matter was referred to arbitration and whether an award was made thereon. The addition of these words gives effect to the latter view. See the undermntioned cases.[4]

The word "matter" in this as well as in the previous paragraph, is no wider than the expression "matter in difference" used in Para. 1 of this Schedule.[5] As has been seen in Note 8 to that paragraph, the difference must be one which has actually arisen at the time of the reference though it need not have arisen at the time of the agreement to refer.[5-a] The Court must, therefore, before filing the award satisfy itself that there was a real dispute between the parties, and that there was an arbitration thereon.[6]

4. Validity of reference and award.—Before ordering an award to be filed, the Court should satisfy itself not only that the matter in difference was referred to arbitration, but also that the submission was valid in law.[1]

An award binds only the parties making the reference and persons who are properly represented in the arbitration proceedings.[2] Thus an award on a question of partition when all the members of the joint family are not parties to the reference is not binding on the non-parties[3] though as between the parties themselves it will be binding.[4] Again, the capacity to make a submission is co-extensive with the capacity to contract. A person who cannot make a contract cannot make a submission and a person whose capacity to make a contract is restricted, can only make a submission to that extent.[5] Thus a minor cannot himself make a submission although a guardian may make it on his behalf for his benefit.[6] An executor or administrator is, competent, but only under certain circumstances, to make a reference to arbitration.[7] But though, as a general principle a person who is not properly represented in the proceedings, is not bound thereby, the proceedings before arbitrators are not intended to be carried on according to the rules of procedure contained in the Civil Procedure Code. If there is a binding reference to arbitration, all that is necessary to be seen is that there is a substantial representation of the different interests before the arbitrators. There is no rule of procedure by which, on the death of some of the parties, the arbitrators could substitute their legal representatives or appoint guardian ad litem for such representatives if they happen to be minors.[8]

An agreement to refer, as has been seen in Para. 17, ante, must, for the purposes of that paragraph, be in writing. In cases, however, of awards without the intervention of the Court, it is not necessary for its validity that the submission should have been in writing; it may be oral[9] or can be gathered from documents connected by oral evidence.[10]

5. Subject-matter of the award.—Para. 20 provides that any person interested in the award (made without the intervention of the Court) may apply to any Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award, that the award be filed in Court. It follows that the subject-matter of the award must be one over which, the Court would have jurisdiction, if a suit were brought in respect thereof. Questions, therefore, which could not be made the subject of a civil suit, under S. 9 of the Code such as caste questions, could not be the subject of an award enforceable in a Court of law.[1] The High Court of Bombay, has, however, held that the jurisdiction of the Court to file an award is conferred by Para. 20 and not by S. 9 of the Code and that the Court could, therefore, file an award under Para. 20, even though the subject-matter of the award is not of a civil nature (such as a division of man pan offerings) and, therefore, not cognisable by a civil Court under S. 9, ante.[2] It is submitted that this view is not correct. The object of filing an award in Court is to convert it into a decree of Court so that it could be enforced like other decrees under the provisions of the Code.[3] It necessarily follows that unless the Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter under S. 9, any decree passed in respect of such subject-matter would be incapable of execution under the Code.

But the fact that a suit could be instituted in a civil Court, in respect of a particular matter, does not necessarily mean that such matter can be referred to arbitration.[4] The difference or dispute between the parties should be such that the parties could if they were so minded settle the matter between themselves by a valid agreement.[5] Thus a dispute as to the office of a public charity,[6] or the appointment of a guardian to a minor,[7] not relating to a private right as beween the parties cannot be made the subject of an award by arbitrators. On the same principle a dispute arising from some illegal transaction or some transaction opposed to public policy cannot be made the subject of a valid award[8] as any agreement which the parties themselves could make in settlement of the dispute would not be enforceable; and the award of the arbitrator on such a dispute would likewise be invalid and unenforceable.[9] See also Para. 1 Note 10, ante.

6. Form of award.—An award on a reference through Court, should be in writing signed by the arbitrators. See Para. 10, ante. But as has been seen in Note 1 to that paragraph, an award made on a reference made without the intervention of the Court need not be in writing or be signed by the arbitrators. It may be oral.[1] But if the arbitrators resolve that their award is to be put in the form of a document to be signed by them as a final expression of their decision, it is only such document that can be treated as their award.[2]

Para. 21, Note 7.

7. Part of award, if can be filed.—If the parties, agree by the terms of the submission, or at the time of the arbitration, that the matters in dispute may be taken up seriatum by the arbitrators and that the award may be delivered in separate parts, each part may be treated as a separate award and filed under this Paragraph.[1]

But in the absence of any specific provision in the submission, if the award

(1) determines any matter not referred to arbitration; or (2) fails to determine any of the matters referred to arbitration or (3) is indefinite or vague or is illegal in respect of a portion of it, the question arises whether the Court can file the valid portion of the award. In case, (1) the matter not referred to arbitration can be separated from the portion referred, the latter can be filed, the former being treated null and void.[2] But if the objectionable portion is inseparable from the rest or not so clearly separable that it can be seen that the part of the award attempted to be supported is not at all affected by the faulty portion, the whole award will be avoided.[3]

In case (2) the award is not a complete award and is, therefore, invalid.[4] But the parties may waive this objection[5] and if they show by their conduct that they do not want a decision upon the points[6] or if the arbitrators find that there is no matter in difference in respect of these points[7] the award may be filed to the extent it was given. Similarly if an award leaves nothing to be done but the performance of some ministerial act it is not faulty for want of finality on the principle certum est quod certum reddi potest[8] (that is certain, which can be made certain.)

In case (3) also, the award is invalid.[9] Where the award did not state either the facts found by the arbitrators or the grounds for their decision and it was, consequently, impossible to hold that the award proceeded solely on those grounds which entitled the arbitrators to act under the arbitration clause, it was held that if the bad was not separable for the good portion of the award, the whole was bad.[10]

8. Lost award.—Where an award in writing is lost, secondary evidence of the terms thereof cannot be adduced in a proceeding under this Paragraph. The remedy of the parties is to file a regular suit to enforce the terms of the award.[1]

9. Grounds of objection under Paras. 14 and 15.—See generally Paras. 14 and 15 and the notes thereto. Where a period of time is fixed in the submission for the making of an award, the arbitrators have no jurisdiction to make the award after the period, and the award so made is invalid.[1] Where no such period is fixed in the submission, the award should be made within a reasonable time, which should be decided with reference to the facts of each case.[2]

10. "Proved."—Under S. 526 of the old Code, it was provided that where no ground as was mentioned in Ss. 520 and 521 (Paras. 14 and 15) was shown the Court should order the award to be filed. It was held in some cases that even on a mere allegation by affidavit or verified statement that the award was bad on the ground specified in Ss. 520 or 521, the Court was bound to dismiss the application and refer the parties to a separate suit.[1] In other cases it was, however, held that the word "shown" which occurred really meant "proved" and that it is not sufficient to allege cause or make out that there is room for argument, but that the cause must be both alleged and proved to the satisfaction of the Court.[2] The substitution of the word "proved" gives effect to the latter view.

11. Res judicata.—See Note 27 to S. 11, ante. As has been seen in that note, all claims embraced in a submission are put an end to by a valid award, which thereafter furnishes the only basis for determining the rights of the parties and constitutes a bar to any action on the original demand.[1] See also Note 2 to Para. 20, ante. An award may be set up as a valid defence in a

14. Appeal against an order filing or refusing to file award.—See S. 104, Note 15, ante.

15. Appeal against decree on award—Sub-S. (2).—S. 104 (f) provides for an appeal against an order filing or refusing to file an award under this Paragraph. This right of appeal is not taken away merely because a decree is passed in accordance with the award. See S. 104, Note 15, ante.[1-a]

But no appeal lies from a decree passed under this sub-Paragraph except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with the award.[1] Thus where the decree does not correctly interpret the award[2] or where the decree awards something which the arbitrators having jurisdiction to award did not award,[3] an appeal will lie. But the appellant is not entitled in such appeal to reopen the whole case and to address on all questions which were raised before the lower Court; his attack must be confined to the legality of the decree as compared with the award.[4]

The decree passed under this Paragraph is a decree "open to appeal" within the meaning of O. 43, R. 1. (d); and, therefore, an appeal lies against an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed under this Paragraph.[5]

16. Enforcement of award.—An award could not be enforced by execution until it has been made a rule of the Court by a decree being passed in accordance therewith.[1] A person who was a party to the arbitration but who was not a party to the decree which followed the award, could not enforce the decree.[2]

17. Appeal to Privy Council.—See Note 8 to S. 104, ante. The provisions of sub-Para. (2) cannot be read so as to affect the right of the parties to go in appeal to the Privy Council under Ss. 109 to 111 of the Code, and do not bar any such appeal.[1]

18. Revision.—The general principle in the case of awards is that it is final. An appeal is allowed from a decree passed on an award only to a very limited extent. A revision in such a case would be more objectionable than an appeal.[1] The High Court should, therefore, proceed very warily in allowing revision in cases of awards.[2] No revision will lie where the conditions of S. 115 are not satisfied.[3] But where there is no real dispute which could be referred to arbitration an award filed by the arbitrators into Court amounts to an abuse of the process of the Court and, therefore, the order is open to revision.[4] Similarly where the Court assumes a jurisdiction which it has not and files the award, a revision will lie.[5] It was broadly held in the undermentioned case[6] relying upon the decision of the Privy Council in Ghulam v. Muhammad Hassan,[6-a] that no revision at all will lie in any case in which a decree has been passed on an award. It is submitted that this is not correct and that the decision of the Privy Council does not lay down any such broad proposition.

THIRD SCHEDULE.

EXECUTION OF DECREES BY COLLECTORS.

Powers of Collector.

P. 1. [S. 321.] Where the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector under section 68, he may—

(a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immovable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment-debtor to raise the amount of the decree; or

(b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium, or by mortgaging, the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold; or

(c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Synopsis.

1. Applicability of this Schedule.
1-A. Powers of the Court and of the Collector.
2. Ancestral property.
3. Application to set aside a sale—See Notes 2 to 6 to S. 70.
4. Competency of Court to call back records sent to the Collector.
5. Mortgage of part of the property in satisfaction of the decree.
6 Cl. (a)—Order 21, Rule 83.
7. Appeal.

Madras Court of Wards Act. See Note 1-A, Pt. (1).
Power of Collector to dismiss or restore execution case. See Note 1, Pt. (10).
Power of Collector to order payment by instalments. See S. 70, Note 2, Pt. (6).

1. Applicability of this Schedule.—Section 148, Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), provides that this Schedule shall not apply to any suit for recovery of rent. Similarly, S. 192, Cl. (a) of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), enacts that this Schedule shall not apply to any suit appeal or other proceeding under that Act.

Under S. 9, sub-S. (3) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act (I of 1920), the Collector executing a decree for rent may, notwithstanding anything contained in this Schedule, allow the tenant time, not exceeding in the aggregate two months, to satisfy the decree.

Section 22-A, sub-S. (2) of the Dekkhan Agriculturist Relief Act (XVII of 1879), provides that a re-sale under that section shall be deemed to be a sale under the provisions of Para. 10 of this Schedule.

The provisions of S. 41, Madras Court of Wards Act, do not affect the duties of the executing Court or the functions of the Collector under this rule.[1]

1-A. Power of the Court and of the Collector.—As has been seen in Note 2 to S. 70, ante, where a decree is transferred to the Collector for execution, the Collector has the powers of execution only, and not of deciding other matters. And even the powers of execution are limited by this Rule to the three courses specified in this Rule.[1] Thus he has no power to enquire into the objections to attachment or sale,[2] to entertain applications for rateable distribution,[3] to decide whether the decree was satisfied[4] or to decide whether there has been a compromise.[5] Nor can he deal with property not covered by the order of sale[6] or set aside the acts of the owner of the property before the transfer was made.[7]

Within the limits of the rule, however, the Collector has absolute jurisdiction to find out the best method of execution allowed to him by law.[8] Where the execution of a decree obtained against a Hindu father and sought to be executed against the joint family property is transferred to the Collector for execution, he becomes seized of the entire interest including the son's interest in the property, and can sell it in such execution.[9] He can dismiss an execution application for default and can likewise restore it in proper cases.[10] Similarly, where an order is passed under a mistake he can set it aside on discovery of the mistake.[11]

In all matters arising in execution, but not covered by the provision of this schedule, the civil Court continues to have jurisdiction. Thus the Court has power to hear objections to the sale held by the Collector[12] or to entertain a suit to set aside the order of the Collector setting aside a sale.[13] Where the Collector fails to effect the sale of property ordered to be sold by the decree, it is open to him to return the papers to the Court. But the Court has the power to send the papers back if the reason which prevented the sale was not such as to operate as a complete impediment to the execution of the decree; no fresh application for that purpose is necessary.[14] It has been held in the undermentioned case that after the transfer of the decree to the Collector for execution, the civil Court cannot entertain an application to add legal representatives of a deceased party.[15]

See also Note 2 to S. 70, Notes to S. 54 and Notes to O. 20, R. 18.

2. Ancestral property.—According to the Allahabad Government Notifications, decrees for the sale of ancestral property must be transferred to the Collector for execution. See Note 3 to S. 70. It has been held that property to which a title is obtained by gift is not "ancestral" property.[1]

3. Application to set aside a sale.—See Notes 2 to 6 to S. 70.

4. Competency of Court to call back records sent to the Collector.—The Court that has made a decree or judicial order which has been transmitted to the Collector for execution is not deprived of its judicial power with respect to it. It has power, where necessary to recall its own records transmitted to the Collector.[1] But such judicial power ought not to be exercised unless the Court is set in motion by one of the parties to the proceedings in execution.[2]

Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to believe that all the liabilities of the judgment-debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immmovable property, may proceed as hereinafter provided.

1. Decree for the payment of money.—A decree for sale of ancestral land or of an interest in such land in enforcement of an hypothecation on such land is a "decree for the recovery of money" within the N.-W. P. Government Notification, No. 671 of 30th August, 1880.[1]

Para. 3.

Notice to be given to decree holders and to persons having claims on property.

P. 3. [S. 322-A.] (1) In any such case as is referred to in paragraph[2], the Collector shall publish a notice, allowing a period of sixty days from the date of its publication for compliance and calling upon—

(a) every person holding a decree for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor capable of execution by sale of his immovable property and which such decree-holder desires to have so executed, and every holder of a decree for the payment of money in execution of which proceedings for the sale of such property are pending, to produce before the Collector a copy of the decree, and certificate from the Court which passed or is executing the same, declaring the amount recoverable thereunder;

(b) every person having any claim on the said property to submit to the Collector a statement of such claim, and to produce the documents (if any) by which it is evidenced.

(2) Such notice shall be published by being affixed on a conspicuous part of the court-house of the Court which made the original order for sale, and in such other places (if any) as the Collector thinks fit; and where the address of any such decree-holder or claimant is known, a copy of the notice shall be sent to him by post or otherwise.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the rule.
2. Power of Collector to hear objections.

1. Scope of the rule.—The persons who are entitled to notice under this Paragraph are:—

(1) Persons holding decrees for money—

(a) which are capable of execution by sale of the immovable property of the judgment-debtor, or

(b) in which proceedings for sale of such property are pending, and,

(2) Persons having any claim on the property of the judgment-debtor.

Where properties have been placed under the management of the Collector, the Court cannot, under the provisions of Para. 11, infra, issue any process against such properties in execution of a decree for the payment of money. The holder of decree, passed after the property comes under the management of the Collector, is, therefore, not a person whose decree is "capable of execution by sale of the immovable property of the judgment-debtor" and is not entitled to be placed on the list of creditors framed under the following Paragraph.[1]

2. Power of Collector to hear objections.—The Collector is not authorised to hear any objection to the sale of the property advertised for sale. He can only call for claims.[1] Where the Collector acting under this Paragraph called on every person who had claim on the property of the judgment-debtor to submit a statement thereof, and in pursuance of the authority vested in him satisfied the claims made, it was not competent to a person who had not made the statement required to claim to set aside the arrangement made by the Collector.[2]

Para. 4.

P. 4. [S. 322-B.] (1) Upon the expiration of the said period, the Collector shall appoint a day for hearing any representations which the judgment-debtor and the decree-holders or claimants (if any) may desire to make, and for holding such inquiry as he may deem necessary for informing himself as to the nature and extent of such decrees and claims and of the judgment-debtor's immovable property, and may, from time to time, adjourn such hearing and inquiry.

(2) Where there is no dispute as to the fact or extent of the liability of the judgment-debtor to any of the decrees or claims of which the Collector is informed, or as to the relative priorities of such decrees or claims, or as to the liability of any such property for the satisfaction of such decrees or claims, the Collector shall draw up a statement, specifying the amount to be recovered for the discharge of such decrees, the order in which such decrees and claims are to be satisfied, and the immovable property available for that purpose.

(3) Where any such dispute arises, the Collector shall refer the same, with a statement thereof and his own opinion thereon, to the Court which made the original order for sale, and shall, pending the reference, stay proceedings relating to the subject thereof. The Court shall dispose of the dispute if the matter thereof is within its jurisdiction, or transmit the case to a competent Court for disposal, and the final decision shall be communicated to the Collector, who shall then draw up a statement as above provided in accordance with such decision.

Synopsis.

1. Statement of debts.
2. Appeal.

1. Statement of debts.—In the statement of debts to be prepared by the Collector under this Paragraph, only such persons are to be entered as are referred to in Para. 3, above. As has been seen in Note 1 to that Paragraph, a person who has obtained a decree for money, after the management of the debtor's property has been placed in the hands of the Collector, is not a person referred to in that Paragraph and is not therefore, entitled to be placed in the statement prepared under this Paragraph.[1]

2. Appeal.—See Para. 6, infra.

Para. 6.

Where District Court may issue notices and hold inquiry.

P. 5. [S. 322-C.] The Collector may, instead of himself issuing the notices and holding the inquiry required by paragraphs 3 and 4, draw up a statement specifying the circumstances of the judgment-debtor and of his immovable property so far as they are known to the Collector or appear in the records of his office, and forward such statement to the District Court; and such Court shall thereupon issue the notices, hold the inquiry and draw up the statement required by paragraphs 3 and 4 and transmit such statement to the Collector.

Effect of decision of Court as to dispute.

P. 6. [S. 322-D.] The decision by the Court of any dispute arising under paragraph 4 or paragraph 5 shall as between the parties thereto, have the force of and be appealable as a decree.

Synopsis.

1. Appeal. 2 Court-fee.

1. Appeal.—The decision by the Court of any dispute arising under Paras. 4 and 5 is, under the terms of the Paragraph appealable as a decree. Where a District Judge to whom a dispute was referred by the Collector, wrongly sent back the same to the Collector and he decided it, it was held, that the remedy of the aggrieved party was to have appealed against the order of the District Judge and not to sue the Collector for a declaration of his right.[1]

2. Court-fee.—Art. 11 of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act, 1870, applies only to memoranda of appeal against decisions which are not decrees or orders having the force of decrees. An order made by the Court under Paras. 4 and 5 has, as enacted in this Paragraph, the force of a decree and is consequently not within Art. 11 of the second schedule of the Court-Fees Act, 1870. A memorandum of appeal against such an order is therefore chargeable with an ad valorem fee under Art.1, Sch. I of that Act.[1] The High Court of Madras has, however, taken a contrary view and held that it is chargeable only with a fixed fee.[2] The decision cannot be accepted as correct.

Para. 7.

Scheme for liquidation of decrees for payment of money.

P. 7. [S. 323.] (1) Where the amount to be recovered and the property available have been determined as provided in paragraph 4 or paragraph 5. the Collector may,—

(a) if it appears that the amount cannot be recovered without the sale of the whole of the property available, proceed to sell such property; or

(b) if it appears that the amount with interest (if any) in accordance with the decree, and, when not decreed, with interest (if any) at such rate as he thinks reasonable, may be recovered without such sale, raise such amount and interest (notwithstanding the original order for sale)—

(i) by letting in perpetuity or for a term, on payment of a premium, the whole or any part of the said property; or

(iii) by selling part of such property; or

(iv) by letting on farm, or managing by himself or another, the whole or any part of such property for any term not exceeding twenty years from the date of the order of sale; or

(v) partly by one of such modes, and partly by another or others of such modes.

(2) For the purpose of managing the whole or any part of such property, the Collector may exercise all the powers of its owner.

(3) For the purpose of improving the saleable value of the property available or any part thereof, or rendering it more suitable for letting or managing, or for preserving the property from sale in satisfaction of an incumbrance, the Collector may discharge the claim of any incumbrancer which has become payable or compound the claim of any incumbrancer whether it has become payable or not, and, for the purpose of providing funds to effect such discharge or composition, may mortgage, let or sell any portion of the property which he deems sufficient. If any dispute arises as to the amount due on any incumbrance with which the Collector proposes to deal under this clause, he may institute a suit in the proper Court, either in his own name or the name of the judgment-debtor, to have an account taken, or he may agree to refer such dispute to the decision of two arbitrators one to be chosen by each party, or of an umpire to be named by such arbitrators.

(4) In proceeding under this paragraph the Collector shall be subject to such rules consistent with this Act as may, from time to time, be made in this behalf by the Local Government.

1. Scope of the Paragraph.—Where a decree is transferred to the Collector for execution the latter has absolute jurisdiction to decide and find out the best method of execution allowed to him by law.[1] The civil Court has no power to pass orders in such matters. Thus where certain properties were sold by the Collector but the whole of the sale amount was not deposited by the auction purchaser, it is entirely in the discretion of the Collector to decide whether he would resell the property or not in order to realise the balance of the purchase-money.[2] But, as has been seen in Note 1 to Para. 1 above, the Collector, has no jurisdiction to decide whether the decree is satisfied.[3]

Where, in exercise of his powers, the Collector has granted lease to the decree-holder in satisfaction of his decree he cannot subsequently resile from it; nor can the Court interfere in the matter[4] as, for example, authorising the grant of a fresh lease.[4-a] Where a decree was transferred to the Collector for making suggestions for the satisfaction of the decree and the Collector suggested that half the attached land should be farmed out to the decree-holder for certain period in satisfaction of the decree but the latter was not prepared to take such lease and the executing Court thereupon merely filed the proceedings, it was held that procedure was wrong and the proceedings could be filed only if all the lawful means for satisfying the decree had been tried and found to be impracticable.[5]

An order of a Collector under this rule disallowing the application of a decree-holder that the amount of the decree might be satisfied by a temporary alienation instead of by a sale, is not appealable.[6]

Para. 8.

Recovery of balance (if any) after letting or management.

P. 8. [S. 324.] Where, on the expiration of the letting or management under paragraph 7, the amount to be recovered has not been realized, the Collector shall notify the fact in writing to the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest, stating at the same time that, if the balance necessary to make up the said amount is not paid to the Collector within six weeks from the date of such notice, he will proceed to sell the whole or a sufficient part of the said property; and, if on the expiration of the said six weeks the said balance is not so paid, the Collector shall sell such property or part accordingly.

(3) The balance shall be applied by the Court—

(b) where the Collector has proceeded under paragraph 1, in satisfaction of the original decree in execution of which the Court ordered the sale of immovable property, or otherwise as the Court may under section 73 direct; or

(c) where the Collector has proceeded under paragraph 2,—

(iii) in discharing rateably the claims of the original decree-holder and any other decree-holders who have complied with the said notice, and whose claims were included in the amount ordered to be recovered.

(4) No other holder of a decree for the payment of money shall be entitled to be paid out of such property or balance until the decree-holders who have obtained such order have been satisfied, and the residue (if any) shall be paid to the judgment-debtor or such other person as the Court directs.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the Paragraph.
2. Maintenance of judgment-debtor's family.
3. Charges.

Accounting by Collector. See Note 1.

1. Scope of the Paragraph.—Where a decree has been sent to the Collector for execution he is bound to render, to the Court, an account of all monies which came into his hands, and must hold the balance of the amount after deducting necessary charges, at the disposal of the Court.[1] But he can not be compelled either to give up the account books into the Court; nor does the Paragraph require him to pay the balance into Court.[2]

2. Maintenance of judgment-debtor's family.—The provision for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor's family is a matter for the determination by the Court and not by the Collector.[1]

3. Charges.—The Collector is entitled to recover as expenses of sale, fees on the scale prescribed for sales under the Land Revenue Code. Poundage fee may also be allowed in addition to such expenses.[1]

Para. 10, Note 1.

Sales how to be conducted.

P. 10. [S. 325.] Where the Collector sells any property under this schedule, he shall put it up to public auction in one or more lots, as he thinks fit, and may—

(a) fix a reasonable reserved price for each lot;

(b) adjourn the sale for a reasonable time whenever, for reasons to be recorded, he deems the adjournment necessary for the purpose of obtaining a fair price for the property;

(c) buy in the property offered for sale, and re-sell the same by public auction or private contract, as he thinks fit.

1. Scope of the Paragraph.—As soon as a sale is confirmed, the Collector is functus officio, and his only duty is to return the papers to the civil Court.[1]

[S. 325-A.] (1) So long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immovable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paragraphs 1 to 10, the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, nor shall any Civil Court issue any process against such property or part in execution of a decree for the payment of money.

(2) During the same period no Civil Court shall issue any process of execution either against the judgment-debtor or his property in respect of any decree for the satisfaction whereof provision has been made by the Collector under paragraph 7.

(3) The same period shall be excluded in calculating the period of limitation applicable to the execution of any decree affected by the provisions of this paragraph in respect of any remedy of which the decree-holder has been temporarily deprived.

Para. 11, Note 1.

It is incapable of ratification or of enforcement in equity.[4] Where a mortgagee under a mortgage which is void as being in contravention of the provisions of this Paragraph pays off a prior mortgage he will have no right to be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee.[5]

But the incompetency of the judgment-debtor under this Paragraph is confined to the property in respect of which the Collector has assumed management, and does not extend to property which has been excluded from such management. A transfer by the judgment-debtor of such property is not within the prohibition of this Paragraph.[6]

A member of a joint Hindu family against the manager of which a decree has been obtained as representing the family is a "judgment-debtor" within the meaning of this Paragraph and is incompetent to alienate any portion of the properties in the management of the Collector.[7] But the incompetency does not extend to the lessee from the Collector and he can, therefore, alienate his interest in the lease.[8] The disability to alienate begins from the date of the order of transfer to the Collector and continues so long as any of the debts, for the satisfaction of which the property was taken under the management of the Collector, remains unpaid.[9] In other words the disability continues until the decree is satisfied and the proceedings in appeal and revision therefrom are completed.[10]

Illustrations.

1. A, the judgment-debtor, makes a transfer of his property after the Court passes an order transferring the decree for execution to the Collector and before the order reaches the Collector. The transfer is void.[11]
2. A decree was transferred to the Collector for execution. A portion of the property of the judgment-debtor was sold by the Collector, the price realised being more than sufficient to satisfy the decree. Before the sale was confirmed, however, the judgment-debtor sold the remaining portion of the property to X. Held, that the sale was void inasmuch as the property must be deemed to be under the management of the Collector until confirmation of the sale.[12]
3. The execution of a decree against A is transferred to the Collector and his properties become vested in him for the purpose of such execution. The Collector grants a lease of the property to X for a certain number of years. A mortgages the demised properties during the subsistence of the lease.

Para. 11, Notes 1—3.

The mortgage is void as the incompetency of A continues so long as the scheme for liquidation subsists.[13]

Where, however, a sale takes place in contravention of this Paragraph without either party knowing that he was violating the law, the vendor will, in equity, be compelled to refund the purchase-money received by him.[14] Again where a suit is brought by a mortgagee on a mortgage executed by the judgment-debtor in contravention of this Paragraph, but the latter does not raise any plea as to the void character of the mortgage and a decree is passed thereon, he cannot raise such objection in execution of the decree.[15]

A contract of sale does not create a charge within the meaning of this rule.[16] The word "alienate" is used ejusdem generis with the preceding words "mortgage," "charge" or "lease" and contemplates a transfer which would have a present effect and not a devise, such as a will or a donatio mortis causa, which can have operation only after the death of the testator.[17]

2. Alienation subsequent to adjustment.—After an adjustment has been certified and is recorded by the Collector, the prohibition against alienation imposed by this Paragraph no longer subsists. It is competent to the judgment-debtor to mortgage, sell or otherwise alienate his property thereafter.[1]

3. Permission of the Collector—So long as the properties of the judgment-debtor are in the management of the Collector, his written permission is absolutely necessary to validate a mortgage or other alienation executed by the judgment-debtor. The permission need not, however, take any special form. Nor is it necessary that every detail of the transaction should be sanctioned by the Collector, nor should there be a separate permission in respect of each deed when it is clear that the whole transaction had his permission.[1]

Permission to alienate can be inferred from written words employed by the Collector from time to time.[2]

A sale will be valid even if permission is obtained before the registration of the document.[3]

A sale by a judgment-debtor with the permission of the Collector under this schedule has not the same effect as a sale by a Collector himself in execution, but amounts only to a private sale.[4]

Para. 11, Notes 4—6.

4. Power of civil Court to issue process.—Where a Collector holds a judgment-debtor's property under his control by virtue of the powers conferred on him by S. 68, a new process cannot be issued by a civil Court in execution of a decree for the payment of money.[1] But any attachment effected before the papers which had been returned by the Collector, are sent back to the Collector, will be valid.[2] An attachment before judgment can be effected since it is not a process in execution.[3] The surplus sale proceeds after satisfaction of a mortgage-decree may be attached in execution as it is not an attachment of any immovable property.[4] But no Receiver can be appointed to take an account of the annual income of the property within the control of the Collector.[5] The Allahabad High Court has held that the prohibition does not apply to a mortgage-decree in which the Court has ordered the sale of specific property.[6]

5. Termination of the Collector's powers.—The powers of the Collector under the schedule terminate as soon as the decree is certified as satisfied.[1] Thus where a deposit is made of the amount which would fully satisfy the decree,[2] or where the Collector leases the property to the decree-holder for a certain number of years in full satisfaction of the decree, and the decree is certified as satisfied[3] the Collector's powers under this schedule cease, and an alienation made by the judgment-debtor thereafter is not void. But the mere fact that the property is sold and fetches more than the decretal amount, does not put an end to the management of the Collector. His powers continue to exist till the confirmation of the sale.[4] The presumption is that such powers continue until they are proved to have ceased.[5] Where a civil Court draws up "Form C" in respect of the properties attached by it, and sends the same to the Collector but the latter returns it to the civil Court for some corrections to be made therein, the proceedings before the Collector must be deemed to be pending even during the period during which the "Form C" was pending in the civil Court for correction.[6]

6. Limitation.—This Paragraph expressly excludes from calculation the period during which the decree is before the Collector for execution.[1]

Para. 11, Note 6.

The reason is that during such period, the decree-holders have no remedy by execution against the property of the judgment-debtor in the management of the Collector.[2] But the exclusion is permissible only in cases where a provision has been made under Para. 7 for the satisfaction of the decree and where the decree-holder has in consequence been deprived of his remedy. Consequently if no such provision is made, the period cannot be excluded.[3]

The words "period of limitation" in this Paragraph apply to the restrictions placed upon the right of the decree-holder both by the Limitation Act, 1908 and by S. 48 of the Code.[4] Where at a sale held by the Collector no bidders appear and the Collector sends the papers back to the civil Court, but the civil Court returns the papers again to the Collector, the period from the date of the original application will be excluded for the purposes of S. 48 of the Code.[5]

Synopsis.

1. Legislative changes. ... 1 to sub-S. (2).
2. Appointment of temporary Judges. Proviso 3. Sub-S. (4).

1. Legislative changes.—Clause (d) of sub-S. (3) has been substituted by the Indian High Courts Act, 1922 (12 and 13 Geo. V, C. 20).

2. Appointment of temporary Judges, Proviso 1 to sub-S. (2).—This proviso does not mean that as regards each High Court appointments can only be made for periods not exceeding two years in all however much they may be required subsequently. It should be read as meaning that the appointments may be made from time to time for such period not exceeding two years as may be required on each occasion when the power is exercised.[1]

3. Sub-Section (4).—The expression "one third of the Judges of the High Court" means one-third of the existing number of Judges, irrespective of the previous strength and number of the Judges constituting the High Court.[1]

S. 102.

Tenure of office of Judges of High Courts.

102. (Ch. Act, S. 4.)—(1) Every Judge of a High Court shall hold his office during His Majesty's pleasure.

(2) Any such Judge may resign his office, in the case of the High Court at Calcutta, to the Governor-General in Council, and in other cases to the local Government.

S. 103.

Precedence of Judges of High Courts.

103. (Ch. Act, S. 5.).—(1) The Chief Justice of a High Court shall have rank and precedence before the other Judges of the same Court.

(2) All the other Judges of a High Court shall have rank and precedence according to the seniority of their appointments, unless otherwise provided in their patents.

Act, S. 6.)—(1) The Secretary of State in Council may fix the salaries, allowances, furloughs, retiring pensions, and where necessary, expenses for equipment and voyage, for the Chief Justices and other Judges of the several High Courts, and may alter them, but any such alteration shall not affect the salary of any Judge appointed before the date thereof.

(2) The remuneration fixed for a Judge under this section shall commence on his taking upon himself the execution of his office, and shall be the whole profit or advantage which he shall enjoy from his office during his continuance therein.

(3) If a Judge of a High Court dies during his voyage to India, or within six months after his arrival there, for the purpose of taking upon himself the execution of his office, the Secretary of State shall pay to his legal personal representatives, out of the revenues of India, such sum of money as will, with the amount received by or due to him at the time of his death on account of salary, make up the amount of one year's salary.

(4) If a Judge of a High Court dies while in possession of his office and after the expiration of six months from his arrival in India for the purpose of taking upon himself the execution of his office, the Secretary of State shall pay to his legal personal representatives, out of the revenues of India, over and above the sum due to him at the time of his death, a sum equal to six months' salary.

Provision for vacancy in the office of Chief Justice or other Judge.

105. (Ch. Act, S. 7.)—(1) On the occurrence of a vacancy in the office of Chief Justice of a High Court, and during any absence of such a Chief Justice, the Governor-General in Council in the case of the High Court at Calcutta, and the local Government in other cases, shall appoint one of the other Judges of the same High Court to perform the duties of Chief Justice of the Court, until some person has been appointed by His Majesty to the office of Chief Justice of the Court, and has entered on the discharge of the duties of that office, or until the Chief Justice has returned from his absence, as the case requires.

(2) On the occurrence of a vacancy in the office of any other Judge of a High Court, and during any absence of any such Judge, or on the appointment of any such Judge to act as Chief Justice, the Governor-General in Council in the case of the High Court at Calcutta, and the Local Government in other cases, may appoint a person, with such qualifications as are required in persons to be appointed to the High Court, to act as a Judge of the Court; and the person so appointed may sit and perform the duties of a Judge of the Court, until some person has been appointed by His Majesty to the office of Judge of the Court and has entered on the discharge of the duties of the office or until the absent Judge has returned from his absence, or until the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, sees cause to cancel the appointment of the acting Judge.

Synopsis.

1. Sub-S. (2).
2. Time within which appointment of acting Judge should be made.

1. Sub-Section (2).—The words "upon the happening of a vacancy in the office of Judge" mean upon the happening of a vacancy in the office of a Judge appointed to his office by His Majesty. They are not applicable to the case of a vacancy caused by a person appointed to act as a Judge under this sub-section.[1]

2. Time within which appointment of acting Judge should be made.—No limit of time is mentioned within which the appointment should be made. That is left to the discretion of the Local Government. Hence the fact that an appointment is made by the Local Government, not immediately or within a reasonable time after the occurrence of the vacancy will not have the effect of invalidating the appointment and render the judgment of the Judge so appointed a nullity.[1]

JURISDICTION.

Jurisdiction of High Courts.

106. (Ch. Act, S. 9.)—(1) The several High Courts are Courts of record and have such jurisdiction, original and appellate, including admiralty jurisdiction in respect of offences committed on the high seas, and all such powers and authority over or in relation to the administration of justice, including power to appoint clerks and other ministerial officers of the Court, and power to make rules for regulating the practice of the Court, as are vested in them by letters patent, and, subject to the provisions of any such letters patent, all such jurisdictions, powers and authority as are vested in those Courts respectively at the commencement of this Act.

(2) (21 Geo. 3, C. 70).—The High Courts have not and may not exercise any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force.

Synopsis.

1. Original revenue jurisdiction.
2. Revenue—Meaning of.
3. Power to make rules for regulating the practice of the Court.

1. Original revenue jurisdiction.—Sub-S. (2) re-enacts the prohibition which was contained in S. 8 of the East India Company Act, 1780, Cl. 23 of the Charter of the Supreme Court of Madras, 1800, and Cl. 30 of the Charter of the Supreme Court of Bombay, 1823. There was no such similar provision in the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or in the Letters Patent issued thereunder. The High Court has now no original jurisdiction in matters concerning revenue. Thus, a suit by an assessee for a declaration that an agreement for composition of income-tax between him and the Collector of Madras is in force and that the latter has no right to repudiate the agreement and assess him in contravention thereof, cannot be filed in the High Court.[1] But an order of the High Court under S. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, directing the Chief Revenue Officer to do his statutory duty and state a case for the opinion of the Court is not one made in the exercise of "Original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue", and the High Court is competent to pass such an order.[2]

2. Revenue—Meaning of.—Money derived by a sale of smuggled goods which are seized and confiscated by the customs authorities is "revenue" within the meaning of this section. Consequently an action in trover against the Secretary of State for India for the recovery of the value of such goods on the allegation that the action of the customs authorities is illegal, cannot be entertained on the original side of the High Court.[1]

3. Power to make rules for regulating the practice of the Court.—The High Court is empowered under sub-S. (1) to make rules for regulating its practice. It is not necessary that the sanction of the Local Government should be obtained for such rules.[1] Where there is nothing inconsistent in the rules so framed with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, the High Court can apply the provisions of the latter Code. Thus, there being no provision in the original side rules of the Madras High Court similar to that contained in O. 33, Rr. 10 and 11 of the Code, the High Court of Madras has held that it is competent to apply those provisions in a suit pending on its original side. It should be noted that under S. 131 of the Act read with Sch. V thereof, the Indian Legislature is empowered to repeal or alter the provisions of this section; and the Code of Civil Procedure being an enactment of the Indian Legislature, the provisions contained therein relating to Court-fee in pauper suits may be taken to apply to the original side also.[2]

Powers of High Court with respect to subordinate Courts.

107. (Ch. Act, S. 15.)—Each of the High Courts has superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and may do any of the following things, that is to say:—

(a) call for returns;

(b) direct the transfer of any suit or appeal from any such Court to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction;

(c) make and issue general rules and prescribe forms for regulating the practice and proceedings of such Courts;

(d) prescribe forms in which books, entries and accounts shall be kept by the officers of any such Courts; and

(e) settle tables of fees to be allowed to the sheriff, attarneys, and all clerks and officers by Courts:

Provided that such rules, forms and tables shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of any law for the time being in force, and shall require the previous approval, in the case of the High Court at Calcutta, of the Governor-General in Council, and in other cases of the local Government.

1. Legislative changes.—This section is practically a reproduction of S. 15 of the High Courts Act or the Charter Act, 1861, (24 and 25, Vict., C. 104).

The word "law" in the proviso to the section was substituted for the word "Act" by Sch. I of the Government of India (Amendment) Act, 1916 (6 and 7, Geo. V, C. 37).

2. Superintendence.—The term "Superintendence" has a legal force and signification which are perfectly well known to the Legislature.[1] The object of superintendence is to keep all inferior Courts and jurisdictions within the bounds of their authority, to see that they do what their duty requires them to do and that they do it in a legal manner.[1-a] In England "it is the peculiar business of the Court of the King's Bench to superintend all inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of those judicial and ministerial powers with which the Crown or Legislature has invested them, and this not only by restraining their excesses but also by quickening their negligence and obviating their denial of justice".[2] This wide power has been given to the High Courts in India in a limited and modified form by S. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, by S. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, by Cl. 13 of the Letters Patent (Madras, Bombay and Calcutta) and by other enactments. These, however, do not exhaust the powers of superintendence of the Chartered High Courts in India. When the Supreme Courts were established in India, they were invested with the same powers of superintendence as were exercised by the Court of the Queen's Bench in England.[3] Under S. 9 of the High Courts Act, 1861 (known as the Charter Act) which abolished the Supreme Courts and empowered the establishment of the High Courts, it was provided that the High Court to be established "shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever, in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency, abolished under this Act".[3-a] Finally S. 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915 (which has repealed the High Courts Act, 1861) provides that the High Courts have, "subject to the provisions of any such Letters Patent, all such jurisdictions, powers and authority as are vested in those Courts respectively at the commencement of this Act". It is thus clear that in addition to the powers given by this section and by other statutes, the Chartered High Courts have inherited from the Supreme Courts, the wide powers of superintendence exercised by the Court of the King's Bench in England.[4] Thus a Chartered High Court can issue a writ of certiorari to persons or bodies acting judicially but which are not Courts subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, and which cannot be dealt with under S. 107 of this Act.[4-a] (For a fuller discussion of this, see Note 17, infra.)

The powers of superintendence under this section are much wider than the powers vested in the High Courts under S. 115. The latter applies only where a case has been decided by any Court subordinate to the High Court, in which no appeal lies thereto, and the High Court can interfere only in the three cases specified therein. There are no such limitations upon the power of the High Court, under this section which can therefore be exercised even in cases not covered by S. 115.[5] It may be exercised in administrative as well as judicial matters[6] and in Civil as well as Criminal proceedings.

The exercise of the power is in the discretion of the Court to which the application is made[7] and the power being one in the nature of extraordinary jurisdiction, should be exercised sparingly and with caution and on sound judicial principles.[7-a] The principles guiding the exercise of such discretion have been thus stated by West, J., in Shivanathaji v. Joma Kashinath[8] as follows:—

(1) The Court having called up the record or proceedings of a subordinate Court, will itself investigate the facts on which a jurisdiction has been assumed or declined; on which it depends whether the subordinate Court could, or could not, legally deal with the matter in question, either at all, or on the principle to which it has referred the case; or according to which its mode of enquiry, or of action may, or may not, have been in contradiction, rather than obedience, to the rules of procedure, or the principles implied in them, to such a material extent as to defeat the purpose of the law.

(2) If the Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction, of investigation and of command have been satisfied by the inferior Court it will not substitute its own appreciation of evidence or its own judgment thereon.[9]

(3) Where an appeal is provided the Court will not interfere by any peremptory order with the ordinary course of adjudication save in cases wherein a defect of the law and a grave wrong are manifest and are irremediable by the regular procedure.

(4) Where a decree or order of a subordinate Court is declared by the law to be for its own purposes final or conclusive, though in its nature provisional, as subject to displacement by the decree in another more formal suit, the Court will have regard to the intention of the legislature that promptness and certainty should in such cases be in some measure accepted instead of judicial perfection. It will rectify the proceedings of the inferior Court where the extrinsic conditions of its legal activity have plainly been infringed; but where the alleged or apparent error consists in a misappreciation of evidence or misconstruction of the law intrinsic to the enquiry and decision it will respect the intended finality and will intervene peremptorily only when it is manifest that by the ordinary and prescribed method an adequate remedy or the intended remedy cannot be had.

(5) The Court will, in all cases regard its exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction as discretional and subject to considerations of the importance of the particular case or of the principle involved in it, of delay on the part of an applicant and of his merits with respect to the case in which the interference is sought.

(6) The Court will sedulously abstain from making any order or refusing to make it on grounds the appreciation of which is exclusively assigned by law to some other authority provided the legal competence be exercised in good faith on matters that may reasonably be understood as within its lawful range.

The following are some of the classes of cases in which, in accordance with the principles set forth above, the High Court will interfere under this section:—

(1) Where the decision of the lower Court is without jurisdiction or in excess of its jurisdiction.[10]

The High Court will not generally interfere in the following cases:—

(1) Where the applicant has other remedies open to him as for instance by way of appeal[23], review[24] or separate suit.[25]

(2) Where the effect of interference would be tantamount to giving a right of appeal or revision which the applicant is not entitled to under law and which would amount to an evasion of the law.[26]

(3) Where the error complained of against the lower Court is not one relating to jurisdiction but is a mere error of law or error of fact or improper appreciation of evidence.[27]

(4) Where the applicant is guilty of laches and delay.[28]

3. "Over all Courts."—To attract the operation of this section it must first of all be established that the decision sought to be assailed is that of a Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. This section does not entitle the High Court to rectify executive injustice.[1] Thus an order passed by a Magistrate in his executive capacity under S. 25, of the Police Act cannot be revised under this section.[2]

4. Election Courts.—A subordinate Judge refusing to try an election petition under the Madras District Municipalities Act is not acting as a Court but as a persona designata, and the High Court cannot set aside such an order, though illegal, under this section.[1] Similarly, the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise an order passed by a Presidency Magistrate in an enquiry held under the rules framed under the Madras City Municipal Act III of 1904, as to the competency or otherwise of a candidate for Municipal selection.[2] A Municipal Commissioner sitting as an election Court under the U.P. Municipalities Act II of 1916 is not also a Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court within the meaning of this section.[3]

5. Rent controller.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta[1] that the Controller and the President in discharging their duties under Ss. 15 and 17 respectively of the Calcutta Rent Act 1920, act as Civil Courts, and are subject to the appellate and consequently the superintending jurisdiction of the High Court. The High Court of Rangoon[2] has, on the other hand, held that the controller under the Rangoon Rent Act 1920, is not acting as a Court, and the High Court has no power of superintendance over him. It has further held that the Chief Judge of the Rangoon Small Cause Court, when exercising his powers in references under S. 18 of the Rangoon Rent Act, does not act as a Court but only as a persona designata and is therefore not subject to the appellate or revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under this section.[3]

6. Land acquisition proceedings.—A Collector, refusing to refer a matter to the Court under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act[1] or making an award under S. 11 of that Act[2] does not act as a Court and is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. The High Court has therefore no power of superintendence in such cases.

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in the undermentioned case[3] that the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal acting under S. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act, is a Court subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure as also under this section. The High Court of Bombay[4] has held that the District Court acting under S. 198 of the Bombay City Municipalities Act 1925 and exercising its powers in Land Acquisition proceedings is subject to the appellate and superintending jurisdiction of the High Court.

7. Subject to its appellate jurisdiction.—In order that the present section may apply, it is essential that the decision sought to be revised should be that of a Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court.[1] The two things necessary to constitute appellate jurisdiction are the existence of the relation of superior and inferior Court and the power on the part of the former to review decisions of the latter.[2] It is not however necessary that the particular decision sought to be set aside under this section should be appealable to the High Court.[3] The words "subject to its appellate jurisdiction" do not mean subject to appellate jurisdiction in that particular matter, for revision, would not be necessary if appeal lay, but that the Court is normally subject to its appellate jurisdiction or even in certain specific cases only.[4]

The following have been held to be Courts subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court.

The following have been held not to be subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court within the meaning of this section.

(1) The Board of Revenue acting under S. 172 of the Madras Estates Land Act[9] or a Revenue Officer when making a settlement of rents under Chapter 11 of that Act.[10]

(2) A Revenue Divisional Officer acting under S. 7 of the Madras Hereditary Village Officers Act III of 1895.[11]

8. Agency Commissioner.—A Commissioner acting under the Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agency Act,[1] and the Mewas Agent in the Bombay Presidency[2] are Courts subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court.

9. Commissioner acting under the Defence of India Act.—The special tribunals created under the Defence of India Act 1915 are by the very Act which created them subject to no appellate jurisdiction whatever and the High Court cannot therefore exercise any superintendence under this section over such Courts.[1]

10. Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act.—Proceedings under S. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act are judicial proceedings of a Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court and can be revised under this section where such proceedings are not in conformity with the requirements of S. 36.[1] But the mere fact that the order of the District Judge is against the weight of evidence or is erroneous in law cannot afford a ground for interference under this section.[2]

Govt. Ind. Act, S. 107, Notes 10—11.

The High Court of Lahore[3] has held that it can in the exercise of its general powers of superintendence send for the records of a proceeding under S. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act and direct a transfer of the proceedings to another Court. The High Court of Patna has, on the other hand taken a contrary view in the case cited below[4] and refused to order a transfer.

11. Criminal proceedings.—As has been seen in Note 2, ante, the power of superintendence under this section can be exercised in Civil as well as Criminal proceedings. Thus the High Court can direct a Sessions Judge to rehear an appeal after taking additional evidence, on the ground that there is a failure of duty.[1]

The High Court has exercised its powers of superintendence in the following cases:—

(1) Order dismissing a complaint under S. 203, Criminal Procedure Code.[2]

(2) Order reviving a complaint after discharge.[3]

(3) Order refusing[4] or granting[5] sanction to prosecute.

(4) Order under S. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code.[6]

(5) Order under S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.[7]

(6) Order of a panchayat Court under Madras Panchayat Courts Act II of 1920.[8]

(7) Conviction by the Union Bench under the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, V of 1919.[9]

(8) Conviction under the Bengal Emergency Ordinance 1931.[10]

Prior to the amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure in 1923, orders under Ss. 143 and 144 thereof and proceedings under Chapter XII (viz. S. 145 to 148) were excluded from the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court by virtue of S. 435, Cl. 3. Consequently the High Courts resorted to their powers under this section whenever such proceedings were in excess of the jurisdiction of the subordinate Magistrates[11] or amounted to an abuse of their powers or resulted in something akin to the denial of the right of fair trial.[12] Under the Amending Act XVIII of 1923, Cl. 3 has been omitted in S. 435 and the bar to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court has thus been removed. But still the High Court can exercise its extraordinary powers under this section as for instance where an order under S. 144 amounts to an abuse of the process of law.[13]

12. Power to expunge from record.—The High Court has power under this section to delete irrelevant matter in the judgment of the lower Court.[1] Thus where a Magistrate found on a discussion of the evidence that the case for the prosecution was false, and went on to remark that his own impression was that the case was true, the High Court ordered the remark to be expunged from the judgment.[2]

13. Difference of opinion among Judges.—Where the Judges constituting a Bench which heard an application under this section differed in their opinion the order of the Senior Judge under Cl. '36 of the Letters Patent before the amendment thereof in 1928, was held to prevail.[1] As to the effect of the amendment, see Note 12 to S. 98.

14. Power of superintendence—If can be exercised by Judge sitting in the Insolvency or Original Side of the High Court.—A single Judge of the High Court exercising Insolvency Jurisdiction has no power under this section to stay insolvency proceedings pending before the District Judge in the moffussil.[1] For such a power see S. 18-A of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The power of superintendence and revision stand on the same footing and is exercised by the High Court in its appellate and not in its original jurisdiction.[2] Hence a Judge acting in the exercise of his original jurisdiction has no power to stay the hearing of a suit pending before a subordinate Judge in the moffussil.

15. Power to transfer—Cl. (b).—The High Court has power to transfer a case pending on the file of a Court subject to its appellate jurisdiction to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction.[1] Thus, the High Court can transfer a case pending on the file of the Agency Commissioner in the Madras Presidency or the Mewas agent in the Bombay Presidency. But according to the High Court of Madras[1-a] the transfer cannot be made to the District Court as that Court is not of equal or superior jurisdiction but should be made only to the High Court; whereas, according to the High Court of Bombay the transfer can be made to the District Court.[2]

The High Court can exercise its powers of transfer under this section even where an application has been made to the District Judge under S. 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure and he has refused it.[3]

16. Power to punish contempt of Court's authority.—The Chartered High Courts in India are superior Courts of Record and have the power to punish in a summary manner either by fine or imprisonment or by both any contempt of their authority. The contempt of Court is not punishable as an offence under the Indian Penal Code or the Code of Criminal Procedure but is an offence punishable under the common law of England; and the High Courts in India have, as has been seen in Note 2 above, inherited the power from the old Supreme Courts which were invested with, and exercised the powers of the Court of the King's Bench in England.[1]

Prior to the passing of the Contempt of Courts Act, XII of 1926, there was a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether the High Court had power to punish a contempt not of itself but of the subordinate Courts.

In Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal, (I. L. R. 41 Cal. 173), the High Court of Calcutta held that the common law jurisdiction of the High Court to punish contempt did not extend to punishing a contempt of the subordinate Court. In re Venkat Rao, (21 Mad L. Jour. 832), the High Court of Madras on the other hand, held that the High Court had power to punish such a contempt under its common law jurisdiction though not under S. 15 of the Charter Act. In Emperor v. Balkrishna, (1922 Bom. 52), the High Court of Bombay held that where a certain publication in connection with the proceedings of a subordinate Court had the effect of impeding the administration of justice it amounted to a contempt of the High Court and that it could punish such contempt under its superintending powers under this section. The High Court of Allahabad has also held that it has, as a Court of Record, jurisdiction to punish acts of contempt committed against Courts subordinate to itself.[1-a] The conflict has now been set at rest by the aforementioned Act XII of 1926 which empowers the High Court specifically to punish a contempt of the subordinate Court where such contempt does not amount to an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. The Act besides defining and fixing a limit as to the punishment to be imposed in such cases, also empowers the Chief Courts (which do not possess any common law powers of the Court of the King's Bench in England as the High Courts do) to punish a contempt of its authority. See also the cases cited below.[2]

17. Power to issue writ of certiorari.—"The writ of certiorari is the process by which the King's Bench Division in the exercise of its superintending power over inferior jurisdictions requires the Judge or such officers of such jurisdictions to certify or send proceedings before them into the King's Bench Division whether for the purpose of examining into the legality of such proceedings or for giving fuller or more satisfactory effect to them than could be done by the Court below".[1] The jurisdiction of the High Courts in India to issue such writs, as already noticed in Note 2, ante, is derived from the Supreme Courts which had and exercised the jurisdiction and powers of the Court of the King's Bench in England. Being a power derived from the English common law, the High Courts in India should be guided by the principles laid down by the English authorities as regards the scope and limitations of their jurisdiction to issue such writs.[2] Such jurisdiction is original jurisdiction, but extends over all inferior tribunals amenable to its authority.[3] It, however, applies to the judicial acts and not to the ministerial acts of such tribunals.[4] The term "judicial does" not mean only acts of Judges or legal tribunals. "Whenever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects and having the duty to act judicially act in excess of their legal authority, they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench division exercised in these writs."[5] But the High Court has no power to issue the writ against the Governor acting with the minister of public health, for the latter can claim exemption from the jurisdiction of the High Court for any act, counselled or ordered by them in their public capacity under S. 110 of this Act.[6]

The issue of the writ of certiorari is in the exercise of the discretion of the High Court and the High Court will decline to exercise it in favour of an applicant who "armed with a point either of law or of fact which would oust the jurisdiction of the lower Court has elected to argue a case on its merits before that Court".[7]

18. Appeal.—An order of a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of its powers of superintendence under this section is not appealable to the Privy Council by virtue of S. 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[1] Nor is the order appealable under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. (See commentaries under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.)

contained in the Letters Patent. Such a rule, if made, is ultra vires.[1] Where rules are made delegating powers to the various Judges, the jurisdiction of the latter is fixed and limited by such rules, and any order made by a Judge or Judges in excess of this authority would be void as being without jurisdiction.[2]

4. Powers of the Chief Justice.—It is the province and duty of the Chief Justice to determine what Judge or Judges shall decide each case. If two Judges are appointed by him to hear an appeal, no single Judge has jurisdiction to hear it.[1] When a Judge of the High Court chosen to sit in the sessions if taken ill as soon as the case is begun the Chief Justice has power to direct another Judge to preside over the sessions.[2]

Power of Governor-General in Council to alter local limits of jurisdiction of High Courts.

109. (28 & 29 Vict., C. 15; Ss. 3, 4, 6.)—(1) The Governor-General in Council may, by order, transfer any territory or place from the jurisdiction of any other of the High Courts, and authorise any High Court to exercise all or any portion of its jurisdiction in any part of British India not included within the limits for which the High Court was established, and also to exercise any such jurisdiction in respect of any British subject for the time being within any part of India outside British India.

(2) The Governor-General in Council shall transmit to the Secretary of State an authentic copy of every order made under this section.

(3) His Majesty may signify, through the Secretary of State in Council, his disallowance of any such order, and such disallowance shall make void and annul the order as from the day on which the Governor-General notifies that he has received intimation of the disallowance, but no act done by any High Court before such notification shall be deemed invalid by reason only of such disallowance.

1. Legislative changes.—The words "Any British subject for the time being within" in sub-S. (1) have been substituted for the words "Christian subjects of His Majesty resident in" by S. 1 of the Government of India (Amendment) Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. V, C. 37).

APPENDIX III

DESPATCH FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR CHARLES WOOD'S DESPATCH ACCOMPANYING FIRST LETTERS PATENT OR CHARTER.

Judicial, No. 24.

INDIA OFFICE,
London, 14*th May*, 1862.

To

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

MY LORD,

I HEREWITH transmit to you the Letters Patent or Charter[1], under the Royal Sign Manual, for the High Court of Judicature to be established in Bengal in accordance with the provisions of the Act 24 and 25, Victoria, Chapter 104, for establishing High Court of Judicature in India, and request that you will take immediate measure for instituting the Court, the first Judges of which, including those appointed under the 3rd section of the Act, are designated in the second clause of the Charter. Those appointed by the Crown will be severally informed by me of their appointments to the Court.

2. This Charter will accomplish the great object which has so long been contemplated, of substituting for the Supreme and Sudder Courts abolished by the Act of High Court of Judicature, possessing the combined powers and authorities of the abolished Courts and exercising jurisdiction both over the Provinces under the Sudder Court and over the Presidency Town which forms the local jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

3. Before I review the provisions in detail, it is necessary that I should direct your attention to the general scope and main provisions of the Act in question.

4. It abolishes, in the first place (as soon as the Charter shall issue), the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Dewany Adawlut. It vests in the High Court (by the last provision of section 9) the powers and authorities of those Courts respectively, except so far as the Crown may by such Charter otherwise direct. And (by the first part of the same section) it invests the High Court with such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty, Vice-Admiralty, Testamentary, Intestate and Matrimonial Jurisdiction, and all such powers and authority in relation to the administration of justice in the Presidency, as the same Charter may confer. With respect, therefore, to the fusion of the Supreme and Sudder Courts, it appears obvious that the Act itself speaks, and that to assume and effect the same purpose by affirmative declaration in the Charter would be superfluous. It has been, consequently, deemed unnecessary that the Charter should exhibit on the face of it an explicit statement of the powers and jurisdiction to be possessed by the new Court in consequence of the fusion as would have been the proper course if these powers and jurisdiction had been entirely new. Recourse has been had in some places in lieu of such explicit statement to reference to statutory provisions, and in others, to the Charter of the Supreme Court when the object of clearness appeared to require it. But wherever the Charter does not otherwise specify, the High Court will use the powers and administer the jurisprudence appertaining to those Courts respectively to whose authority it now succeeds.

(1) This Letters Patent, dated the 14th May, 1862, was revoked by further Letters Patent, dated 28th December, 1865.

5. But the Charter is intended positively to declare all such Civil, Criminal and other jurisdictions above specified as the Crown thinks proper by this Charter to confer on it supplementary or additional to its main purpose, namely, the fusion of the aforesaid Courts.

6. Moreover, the words giving authority to confer on the Court such jurisdiction and such powers and authorities for the administration of justice as the Crown may direct, appear very large and such as, in point of fact, invest the Crown with extensive legislative powers, so far as "the administration of justice," within the meaning of the sections, may require. It has been, however, thought best to use this power very sparingly and simply as ancillary to the real purpose of the Act, namely, the establishment of new Courts.

7. Another reason for the form which the present Letters Patent assume, is to be found in the provisions of S. 17 of the Act of last Sessions. By that section power is given to the Crown to recall the Letters Patent establishing the Court at any time within three years after its establishment, and to grant other Letters Patent in their stead. This provision was inserted in the Act, mainly with the view of enabling Her Majesty's Government to avail themselves of the advice and assistance of the Judges of the Court in framing the more perfect Charter by which the jurisdiction and authority of the Court is to be permanently fixed. On this point, I request you will put yourselves in communication with the Judges of the Court, and, at any time previous to the expiration of two years from the date of establishment of the Court, furnish me with any suggestions they make, or any amendments they may propose in the Letters Patent now transmitted, and I shall be glad if, in proposing alterations, the Judges will put their recommendations as nearly as possible in the form in which they wish them to appear in the future Letters Patent.

8. I proceed to notice, in order, such of the provisions of the Charter as appear to me to call for special remark.

Clause 6.

9. By clause 6, power is given to the Chief Justice to appoint the officers of the Court, and to fix their salaries subject, however, in both cases, to the approval and confirmation of the Governor-General in Council. This provision does not refer to the setting of tables of fees, where fees are allowed, which, under S. 15 of the Act, is required to be done by the Court.

10. The Supreme Court exercise an authority entirely independent of the Government in regard to its ministerial officers. The Government, however, has always considered itself at liberty to receive representations from any of the officers of the Sudder or Subordinate Courts who felt themselves aggrieved by the orders of the Judicial Authorities, and to express its opinion on the propriety or otherwise of the proceedings of the Courts in such cases. It will be expedient for you to take the question into your consideration, and, after communication with the Court, to adopt some rule in regard to it, which of course must be uniformly applicable to all the officers of the Court. Constituted as the High Court will be, it will merit all the confidence you can repose in it; but as a question of policy, the extension of the liberty of application to the Government to those who have not hitherto enjoyed it appears to me preferable to taking it away from those who have heretofore been permitted to avail themselves of it, as a mode of obtaining redress against proceedings alleged by the applicants to be unjust and oppressive.

Clauses 7-10.

11. In regard to the admission of Advocates, Vakeels, and Attorneys, the recommendations of the Law Commissioners have been followed. Under the existing practice, the Advocate pleads, and the Attorney acts, for the suitors of the Supreme Court and the Vakeel both pleads and acts for the suitors of the Sudder Court, of which Court the Advocate and Attorney of the supreme Court are ex-officio Vakeels. These terms are employed in the Charter simply to express the functions of these several classes of practitioners. The Advocate and Attorney will respectively plead and act in the High Court and the Vakeel will both plead and act in the High Court as he did in the Sudder Court. Any person may apply to be admitted either as an Advocate, or Vakeel, or Attorney under the rules which the Court is authorized by the Charter to make, and there is nothing in the Charter to prevent the admission of Advocates and Attorneys to be also Vakeels of the High Court, should the Judges consider such a course to be expedient.

12. The provisions in the Act, S. 2, Cl. 4, which declares that Pleader of the Sudder Court, "who shall have been admitted as Pleaders of the High Court," shall be eligible, under certain conditions, to the Bench of the Court, implies that a discretionary power may be exercised as to the admission of the present Pleaders of the Sudder Court to the Bar of the High Court. This enactment will account to you for the omission from the Charter of any provision appointing all the present practitioners of the Supreme and Sudder Courts to the High Court. I conclude, however, that unless, in any special cases, there are strong reasons to the contrary, the Court will admit the whole of the practitioners in the abolished Courts at the date of their abolition, to be the first Advocates, Vakeels, and Attorneys of the High Court.

Clause 10.

13. With reference to the concluding sentence of Clause 10, it is to be observed that the Letters Patent contain no provision reserving to the Attorneys of the present Supreme Court the right of pleading after the issue of this Charter, in the Insolvent Court, as newly regulated by Clause 17. No such provision, however, is necessary, as the Insolvent Court is a separate tribunal not affected by the Act authorising the Letters Patent and will continue a separate Court though, for the future, presided over by a Judge of the High Court. The Attorneys, therefore, will, as heretofore, practise in accordance with the rules of the Insolvent Court itself.

14. By the important provisions contained in the clauses of the Charter, 11 to 38 inclusive, effect is given to the 9th section of the Act, respecting the jurisdictions and powers to be exercised by the High Court.

Civil Jurisdiction, Clause 11.

15. The original civil jurisdiction now exercised by the Supreme Court within the limits of the Presidency Town will henceforth be exercised under the Charter, by the High Court, including in that term (Clause 36 of the Charter) a Judge or Division Court of the High Court, appointed or constituted under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act.

16. As it is very desirable that every suit should be instituted in the Court of the district in which the property forming the subject of dispute is situated, or in which the cause of action has its origin, or in which the defendant resides or carries on business; the jurisdiction hitherto exercised by the Supreme Court (on the ground of constructive inhabitancy or otherwise) over persons and property beyond the local limits of the Presidency Town, but within the limits of the Presidency or Division subject to the authority of the High Court has not been vested in the High Court. The concluding provision of Clause 11 provides that the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court shall be confined to the local limits of the Presidency Town, with power, however, to the Court, under Clause 13, to call for and try any suit instituted in any Court subject to its superintendence, when, for reasons to be recorded, it shall think proper to do so.

Clause 12.

[1]Ardaseer Cursetji v. Perozeboye.

17. The terms of Clause 12, defining the original jurisdiction of the High Court as to suits, are nearly similar to those employed in S. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859), and are intended to include every description of case over which the Mofussil Courts have jurisdiction. By the 8th section of the 21st George III, C. 70, the Supreme Court is precluded from exercising any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue. Further, a decision[1] of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, pronounced in April 1856, ruled against the exercise of the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in matters matrimonial between others than Christians, and even expressed some hesitation as to whether that Court should administer a remedy in such cases on the Civil side. It is one object of the present

Charter to do away with all such restrictions and limitations, as far as this can be done without trenching on the proper province of legislation. It has, therefore, been sought to invest the High Court, in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, with as ample powers in receiving and determining cases of every description, and in applying a remedy to every wrong as are exercised by the Courts not established by Royal Charter, and thus to place the Courts of first instance in the Presidency Towns and in the interior of the country in this respect, as nearly as may be, on the same footing.

18. I shall be glad to be furnished with your opinion, after consultation with the Judges of the Courts, as to the concluding portion of Clause 12, excluding the jurisdiction of the Court in regard to cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta, in which the debt or damage or value of the property sued for does not exceed 100 Rupees. Hitherto, I believe, there has been no tendency to bring into the Supreme Court cases cognizable by the Small Cause Court; but should it appear that under the new system, the time of the High Court is unnecessarily taken up with trying cases which might be instituted in the Small Cause Court, it may become a question for consideration whether the sum, excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court, might not be raised to, say, 300 or 500 Rupees.

19. It has been suggested that the Small Cause Court should be placed on the same footing as a Zillah Court in its subjection to the High Court as a Court of appeal and general superintendence. But I do not consider that it was the purpose of the Act of Parliament of last Session that the Crown, in framing a Charter under it for the High Court, should interfere with the present position and jurisdiction of other and independent Courts. This subject, if desirable, is properly to be attained by legislation. Should you be of opinion that the Small Cause Court ought to be placed in the same relation to the High Court as any other Court subject to its appellate jurisdiction and general control, the measure can be carried into effect by an Act of the Governor-General in Council.

Clause 13.

20. As already observed, the effect of Clause 12 will be to confine the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court within narrower limits than the Civil jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court. By Clause 13, however, the High Court is empowered to call for and to try, as a Court of first instance, any suit which the law requires to be instituted before some other tribunal. By the exercise of the power thus conferred on it, the High Court will be enabled to obviate all reasonable ground of complaint, when it shall deem that any hardship or injustice is likely to result from the compulsory institution in a Zillah Court of a suit which, but for the change in the system, might have been instituted in the Supreme Court.

21. The introduction of the words "whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William" in this and in several other clauses, may appear to require explanation. The Court about to be established is called in S. 2 of the Act, 24 and 25 Victoria, C. 104, a Court "for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William." That title is of course preserved in the Charter. By S. 8, the Supreme and Sudder Courts are abolished and by S. 9 all their jurisdiction, power, and authority, except when otherwise provided are vested in the High Court. But the Supreme Court has various original jurisdictions, extending over the whole of the Presidency of Fort William, and also over some of the Non-Regulation Provinces under the Government of India, and the Sudder Court has various appellate jurisdictions extending over the Bengal Division of the Presidency, and also over the Province of Assam and others, which are not properly parts of the Presidency. The result is, that the High Court "for the Bengal Division," succeeding to the powers of both the Supreme and the Sudder Courts, has, in several respects, jurisdictions in territories not within the Bengal Division. As this is the result of the Act, it might not have been necessary to notice it in the Charter. But for the sake of clearness, and in order to show distinctly that the Charter is meant to apply to these extra local jurisdictions, as well as to the strictly local jurisdiction within the Bengal Division, it has been deemed advisable to introduce these words.

Clauses 14 and 15.

22. Clauses 14 and 15 give effect to the recommendation of the Law Commissioners, that the High Court shall have all the appellate jurisdiction which is now exercised by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, and a new appellate jurisdiction in civil cases, from the Courts of original jurisdiction, constituted by one or more of its own Judges, except that in the case of a decision which has been passed by a majority of the full number of the Judges of the Court, the appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council.

23. It will appear, from a subsequent clause on the Letters Patent, that the proceedings in the High Court in civil cases are to be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Legislature of India, of which Act XXIII of 1861 forms a part. By S. 23 of the last mentioned Indian Act, provision has been made for a difference of opinion on the hearing of an appeal. A difficulty, however, may occur when two Judges, constituting a Division Court for the trial of cases in the exercise of original jurisdiction, differ as to the judgment to be given. For such a case, the Code of Civil Procedure, which is adapted to Courts of first instance presided over by single Judges only, contain no provision. To call in a third Judge, and to re-try the case, with a view to a judgment from which there may be an appeal to the High Court under Cl. 14 would be productive of unnecessary delay and expense to the parties; and I am of opinion that the Court should make provision for such a contingency, by a rule made under the 13th section of the Act of Parliament, providing either that the judgment shall be in accordance with the opinion of the senior of the Judges constituting the Division Court, or that the final judgment shall be entered pro forma, according to such opinion, such judgment being a judgment for the purpose of an appeal against the same, but not for any other purpose.

Clauses 18, 19 and 20.

24. The substantive civil law to be administered by the High Court within the jurisdiction of the Supreme and Sudder Courts, respectively, will, until otherwise provided, continue as at present. This, as I have said, it was no part of the purpose of the Act of Parliament or Charter to effect. And the clauses on which I am now commenting are probably superfluous. But they have been introduced to obviate any apprehension which might have been entertained that in fusing the two Courts together, it was intended to fuse also the law which they have respectively hitherto administered, and thus to make a substantial innovation, not only in the tribunals for administration of the law but of the law itself. I trust, however, that measures may be taken ere long for effecting great improvements in this respect, by enacting for the British possessions in India a body of substantive law, by which all classes shall be governed, and all transactions shall be regulated except in cases to which our Judicatures are required to apply the personal laws of any classes of our Indian subjects.

Clauses 21, 22 and 38.

25. Under Cls. 21, 22, and 38, no change will be effected by the Charter in the administration of criminal justice in the Presidency Town or in respect of persons subject to its criminal jurisdiction, residing in the interior of the country. It appears, however, to Her Majesty's Government that some modification of the existing practice, both at the capital and in the provinces, is necessary and on these points, I shall address you in a separate despatch.

Clause 23.

26. The Sudder Court exercises no original jurisdiction, but by Cl. 23, original criminal jurisdiction, throughout the territories subject to its authority, has been given to the High Court, the principal object being to enable the Judges to hold trials for offences committed out of the Presidency Town, at which from their importance or for other specific cause, it may be expedient that a Judge or Judges of the High Court should preside.

Clauses 24-28.

27. The remaining clauses of the Letters Patent on the subject of the criminal jurisdiction of the High Court do not call for any particular notice. They contain no special provisions respecting the transfer to that Court of the criminal jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court over inhabitants of such parts of India as are not comprised within the local limits of the Letters Patent that having been fully provided for by S. 10 of the Act under the authority of which the High Court is established.

28. As in the case of the Small Cause Court, you will consult the Judges in regard to the relation in which the High Court is to stand to the Magistrates of Calcutta.

Clause 30.

29. Clause 30, respecting the exercise of the jurisdiction by the High Court elsewhere than at its ordinary place of sitting, is a very important provision and one which, I have no doubt, if judiciously carried into effect, will materially tend to the greater efficiency of all the judicatories subject to the superintendence and authority of the High Court. Circumstances may frequently arise when the deputation of a Judge or Judges of the High Court would be a measure of the highest expediency. For such cases the clause under consideration will enable the Government to provide by deputing one or more Judges from the High Court, who would avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them of making a searching inquiry into the manner in which the local Courts were performing their duties.

30. With reference to this clause, it has been considered whether the precedence of S. 14 of the Act of Parliament should not be followed and the authority to make the necessary arrangements for exercise of the Court's jurisdiction out of the usual place of sitting vested in the Chief Justice. On the whole, it was thought that acts partaking so much of an administrative character might be more perfectly performed by the Governor-General in Council. But it is scarcely necessary for me to add that Her Majesty's Government entertain full confidence that the Chief Justice will be the authority habitually consulted in the matter.

Clauses 31 and 32.

31. The Supreme Court exercises at present, Admiralty Jurisdiction under its Charter. The Chief Justice has Vice-Admiralty Jurisdiction under the commission of the 19th July, 1822, and all or any of the Judges of the Supreme Court may be appointed Commissioners, under the provisions of 39 and 40, George III, C. 79, S. 25, for the trial and adjudication of prize causes and other maritime questions arising in India. By the present Charter, the whole of these jurisdictions and power will be vested in the High Court, and as in the Act above cited, by the expression "other maritime questions" in general, mention is made of all the jurisdictions conferred as above-mentioned in the clauses of the Charter, providing both for the civil and criminal maritime jurisdiction of the High Court.

Clauses 33 and 34.

32. The clauses respecting testamentary and intestate jurisdiction do not call for any remark.

Clause 35.

33. Her Majesty's Government are desirous of placing the Christian subjects of the Crown within the Presidency in the same position under the High Court, as to "matters matrimonial" in general as they now are under the Supreme Court, and this they believe to be effected by Cl. 35 of the Charter. But they consider it expedient that the High Court should possess, in addition, the power of decreeing divorce, which the Supreme Court does not possess, in other words, that the High Court should have the same jurisdiction as the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England, established in virtue of 20 and 21 Vic., C. 85, and in regard to which further provisions were made by 22 and 23 Vic., C. 61, and 23 and 24 Vic., C. 144. The Act of Parliament for establishing the High Court, however, does not purport to give to the Crown the power of importing into the Charter all the provisions of the Divorce Court Act, and some of them the Crown clearly could not so import, such for instance as those which prescribe the period of re-marriage, or those which exempt from punishment clergymen refusing to re-marry adulterers. All these are, in truth, matters for Indian legislation and I request that you will immediately take the subject into your consideration and introduce into your Council a Bill for conferring upon the High Court the jurisdiction and powers of the Divorce Court in England, one of the provisions of which should be to give an appeal to the Privy Council in those cases in which the Divorce Court Act gives an appeal to the House of Lords.

34. The object of the proviso at the end of Cl. 35 is to obviate any doubt that may possibly arise as to whether, by vesting the High Court with the powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England, it was intended to take away from the Courts within the divisions of the Presidency not established by Royal Charter any jurisdiction which they might have in matters Matrimonial, as, for instance, in a suit for alimony between Armenians or Native Christians. With any such jurisdiction it is not intended to interfere.

Clause 36.

35. Clause 36 refers to the powers of single Judges and Division Courts, appointed or constituted under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act. By S. 14 of the Act, the power of determining from time to time what Judge in each case shall sit alone, and what Judges shall constitute Division Courts, is placed in the hands of the Chief Justice. It will be observed that the law does not require that a Judge selected from the Bar shall necessarily form a part of every Division Court, and it will be for the Chief Justice to consider whether, in cases exclusively between Natives, it will not be desirable to follow, as far as possible, the course which has already been resolved upon in regard to the cases under appeal to the Sudder Court at the time of its abolition, and to constitute the Division Court of Judges trained in the country, whose knowledge of the Native language will obviate the expense and delay of translating the proceedings.

Clause 37.

36. Clause 37 is a very important one, and there is little doubt, will prove a very salutary provision. It has, therefore, been inserted, although the change introduced is somewhat greater and more substantial than is generally aimed at in this Charter. It extends to the High Court the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Legislature of India for the Court, not established by Royal Charter, and thus accomplishes the object so long contemplated of substituting one simple Code of Procedure for the various systems (corresponding to its common law, equity and admiralty jurisdiction) which have been in operation in the Supreme Court since the date of its establishment.

37. In regard to the rules respecting appeals to the Privy Council the object has been to avoid unnecessary innovation where so much of change, with its necessary inconvenience, is unavoidable. The existing rules which regulate these appeals are, therefore, left in force, with one or two additions only, which experience in the Court of the Judicial Committee has found advisable. For instance, Cl. 40 is introduced, as it had been commonly introduced, of late years in the appeal rules of other dependencies of Great Britain in order to remove all doubts as to the power of the High Court to allow an appeal to the Council from interlocutory judgments.

38. It will, however, be obvious to you that the rules, as now framed, will be liable to the reproach of confusion, and perhaps of uncertainty. They will be compounded of those contained in the Charter and those already in force which will necessitate reference to several documents. You will agree with me that a simple and intelligible Code of Rules, to regulate appeals to the Privy Council from the new High Courts, or rather from the High Courts in general which may be constituted under the Act of Parliament, will be of great advantage to the suitors and the public. I should wish, therefore, that one of the first objects of the Judges, as soon as the amount of labour thrown on them by their new position may allow it, might be to prepare suggestions for such a Code of Rules, which might then be reduced into a complete shape by the authority of the Privy Council at Home.

39. In forwarding the Letters Patent to the Judges of the High Court, you are requested to furnish them with a copy of this despatch. I trust that the Letters Patent taken in connection with the Act for establishing the Court, will be found to contain everything requisite for enabling the Court to proceed at once to the discharge of its important duties. It is possible that omissions may be discovered by the legal authorities in India, which may impede the proper action of the Courts, and should the Judges represent to you that such is the case you will take immediate steps for supplying what is wanting by such legislative measures as you may consider most expedient for remedying the defects brought under your consideration.

40. I cannot conclude this despatch without expressing the deep interest felt by Her Majesty's Government in the success of this important measure. The Crown by its Letters Patent has sanctioned the establishment of a tribunal as the Chief Court of Justice in India, which in the trained learning of the Judges selected from the Bar, and in the knowledge of the language, feelings, and habits of the Natives of that country possessed by the other members of the Court, combines the most material elements of success. And Her Majesty's Government look with confidence to the zealous exertions and cordial co-operation of the Judges to place the administration of Justice in India, under the controlling authority of the Court, in such a state of efficiency as will render it in every respect adequate to its ends, and satisfactory to the people and to the Government.

I have the honour to be,
My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient humble Servant,
(Signed) C. WOOD.

LETTERS PATENT [CALCUTTA, MADRAS AND BOMBAY].

[N.B.—As the Letters Patent for Calcutta, Madras and Bombay are all in very similar terms, the Letters Patent, Calcutta, is given as the main one, and the differences in the wording of the other two Letters Patents indicated within square brackets.]

For the High Court of Judicature for the Presidency of Calcutta.

Recital of Acts 24 & 25 Vict., c. 104.

Victoria, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith. To all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting: Whereas by an Act of Parliament passed in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of Our Reign, entitled "An Act for establishing High Courts of Judicature in India." It was, amongst other things, enacted that it should be lawful for Her Majesty, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to erect and establish a High Court of Judicature [at Madras, for the presidency of Madras aforesaid] at Fort William in Bengal, for the Bengal division of the Presidency of Fort William aforesaid [at Bombay for the Presidency of Bombay aforesaid,] and that such High Court should consist of a Chief Justice and as many Judges, not exceeding Fifteen, as Her Majesty might, from time to time, think fit to appoint, who shall be selected from among persons qualified as in the said Act is declared: Provided always that the persons who at the time of the establishment of such High Court were Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and permanent Judges of the Court of Sudder Dewany Adawlut or Sudder Adawlut of the same Presidency, should be and become Judges of such High Court, without further appointment for that purpose, and the Chief Justice of such Supreme Court should become the Chief Justice of such High Court, and that upon the establishment of such High Court as aforesaid, the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Dewany Adawlut and Sudder Nizamat Adawlut at [Madras]. Calcutta [Bombay] in the said Presidency, should be abolished:

And that the High Court of Judicature so to be established should have and exercise all such civil, criminal, admiralty and vice-admiralty, testamentary, intestate and matrimonial jurisdiction, original and appellate, and all such powers and authority for, and in relation to the administration of justice in the said Presidency as Her Majesty might, by such Letters Patent as aforesaid, grant and direct, subject, however, to such directions and limitations as to the exercise of original, civil and criminal jurisdictions beyond the limits of the Presidency-town, as might be prescribed thereby; and, save as by such Letters Patent, might be otherwise directed, and subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court so to be established should have and exercise all jurisdiction, and every power and authority whatsoever, in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under the said Act at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts:

And whereas We did, upon full consideration of the premises, think fit to erect and establish, and by Our Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland bearing date at Westminster, the twenty-sixth day of June in the Twenty-fifth Year of Our Reign, in the Year of Our Lord, One thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, did accordingly, for Us, Our heirs and successors, erect and establish [at Madras, for the Presidency of Madras aforesaid, a High Court of Judicature, which should be called the High Court of Judicature at Madras] at Fort William in Bengal for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William aforesaid, a High Court of Judicature which should be called the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal [at Bombay, for the Presidency of Bombay aforesaid, a High Court of Judicature which should be called the High Court of Judicature at Bombay] and did thereby constitute the said Court to be a Court of Record: and whereas We did thereby appoint and ordain, that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras] Fort William in Bengal [Bombay] should, until further or other provision should be made by Us, or Our heirs and successors in that behalf, in accordance with the recited Act, consist of a Chief Justice and five Judges, and did thereby constitute and appoint certain persons, being respectively qualified as in the said Act is declared, to be Judges of the said High Court:

And whereas by the said recited Act it is declared lawful for Her Majesty, at any time within three years after the establishment of the said High Court, by Her Letters Patent, to revoke all of such parts or provisions as Her Majesty might think fit of the Letters Patent by which such Court was established, and to grant and make such other powers and provisions as Her Majesty might think fit, and as might have been granted or made by such first Letters Patent:

And whereas by the Act of the twenty-eighth year of Our Reign, chapter fifteen, entitled "An Act to extend the term for granting fresh Letters Patent for the High Courts in India, and to make further provision respecting the territorial jurisdiction of the said Courts," the time for issuing fresh Letters Patent has been extended to the first of January, One thousand eight hundred and sixty-six:

And whereas, in order to make further provision respecting the constitution of the said High Court, and the administration of justice thereby, it is expedient that the said Letters Patent, dated the twenty-sixth of June, One thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, should be revoked, and that some of the powers and provisions thereby granted and made should be granted and made with amendments and additional powers and provisions by fresh Letters Patent.

Cl. 1.

1. Bar Councils Act.—Clauses 9 and 10 and the rules made thereunder should be read as subject to the provisions of the Indian Bar Councils Act, XXXVIII of 1926 to the extent to which such provisions have come into force with reference to any High Court. See S. 19 (2) of the Act. Thus it has been held that Rr. 128 and 129 of the Insolvency Rules of the Madras High Court made under the Letters Patent which precluded advocates from "acting" as distinguished from "pleading" on the Insolvency side of the High Court are no longer in force as they are repugnant to the provisions of the Bar Councils Act.[1] Similarly, a complaint of misconduct against an advocate must first be referred to the Bar Council for inquiry.[2]

2. Authority of advocates, vakils and attorneys.—The authorities of advocates, vakils and attorneys to practise in the High Court is subject to the rules and directions made by the High Court under Cl. 9 in so far as such rules and directions are not repugnant to the provisions of the Bar Councils Act of 1926.[1] The following cases[2] are illustrative of the rules which the High Court is empowered to make under Cl. 9.

3. Disciplinary jurisdiction of High Court over advocates, attorneys and vakils.—The High Court has power under Cl. 10 to remove or suspend from practice, on reasonable cause, any advocate, vakil or attorney practising before it. Under the provisions of the Bar Councils Act of 1926, a complaint of misconduct against an advocate must first be referred to the Bar Council for inquiry.[1] It is not necessary under Cl. 10 that cases of professional misconduct must be dealt with only by the full Court consisting of all the Judges of the High Court for the time being, and it is competent to a Bench of Three Judges to dispose of such cases.[2] In proceedings under Cl. 10 the High Court exercises a special jurisdiction and has inherent power to apply such rules of procedure as may ensure a fair trial.[3] The proceedings are not of a criminal nature and the rules of procedure applicable to a criminal trial such as the filing of a written statement by the accused are not applicable to them.[4] Nor are such proceedings in the nature of civil suits and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to them.[5]

Though it is not incompetent for the High Court to deal, under Cl. 10, with charges of a criminal nature against a practitioner unless and until they have been investigated by a criminal Court, it is eminently fitting that in such cases the criminal prosecution should precede any disciplinary action under Cl. 10.[6]

An order of disbarment is not necessarily final or conclusive for all time and it is open to the Court to re-admit a practitioner after a lapse of time, if it is satisfied that he has, in the interval, conducted himself honourably and that the sentence of exclusion has had the salutory effect of awakening in him a higher sense of honour and duty.[7]

An attorney is an officer of the Court and any person aggrieved by his misconduct can bring it to the notice of the Court.[8]

4. "Reasonable Cause", meaning of.—What is "reasonable cause" for the removal or suspension of a legal practitioner depends on the facts of each case.[1] It is not restricted to misconduct in the strict course of a practitioner's duties, but embraces all causes which may afford reasonable ground for his removal or suspension.[2] Nor is it necessary, for invoking the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court, that any offence should have been committed by the legal practitioner or that his act should have been such as to subject him to anything like general infamy or imputation of bad character.[3]

Disciplinary action against a practitioner under the Letters Patent rests on the principle that the Court deems him an unfit person to act as a legal practitioner and is not by way of punishment.[4]

Where proceedings are taken against a practitioner under Cl. 10 on the ground of his having been convicted of a criminal offence, the propriety of the conviction cannot be questioned in such proceedings but the practitioner can show that the degree of his culpability was not such as to make him an unfit person to be a member of the profession.[5]

An offence committed by an advocate prior to his enrolment may be "reasonable cause" for his removal or suspension from practice, if the offence implies a permanent defect of character of a disqualifying kind.[6]

5. Recognised agents.—The last portion of Cl. 10 provides that no person other than an advocate vakil or attorney can act or plead on behalf of a suitor excepting that a suitor can plead or act on behalf of himself or co-suitor. Thus a recognised agent of a party cannot present an appeal to the High Court.[1] It has, however, been held in the case cited below that an application by a purdanashin lady for leave to appeal in forma pauperis can, in view of Ss. 132 and 133 of the Code, be presented by her recognised agent.[2]

Civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

Local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court.

11. And We do hereby ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal shall have and exercise ordinary original civil jurisdiction within such local limits as may from time to time be declared and prescribed by any law made by competent legislative authority for India and until some local limits shall be so declared and prescribed within the limit declared and prescribed by the proclamation fixing the limits of Calcutta issued by the Governor-General in Council on the 10th day of September, in the year of Our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and ninty-four and the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said High Court shall not extend beyond the limits for the time being declared and prescribed as the local limits of such jurisdiction.

Synopsis.

1. "Local limits."
2. Issue of process outside jurisdiction.
3. Power to transfer or stay suit in the moffusil.

Power of High Court to issue warrant. See Note 2, Pt. (1).

1. "Local limits."—The local limits of the original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Bombay and Madras are to be declared and prescribed by the Governor-in-Council of the respective provinces whereas in regard to the Calcutta High Court the power is in the "competent Legislative Authority for India". A High Court cannot exercise its ordinary original Civil jurisdiction beyond the local limits so prescribed except in so far as provided in Cl. 44 of the Letters Patent read with S. 109 of the Government of India Act 1915. Thus the Indian Legislature can confer on a High Court jurisdiction in any particular suit or class of suits arising outside the Local limits prescribed under this clause.[1]

The limits of the ordinary original Civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras have been declared and prescribed by the following Acts respectively.

Act 15 of 1919. (For Calcutta.)

Madras Act 4 of 1927. (For Madras).

2. Issue of process outside jurisdiction.—A warrant of arrest issued by a High Court on the Original Civil side authorising the bailiff to execute it against the judgment-debtor wherever he may be found in the Presidency is without jurisdiction.[1] Similarly a writ of fieri facias issued outside the local limits of the original jurisdiction of a High Court is illegal.[2] But a High Court has power to issue any process against a person

3. Power to transfer or stay suit in the moffusil.—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that a single Judge sitting on the original side cannot stay a suit pending before a Subordinate Judge in the moffusil, except under rules so enabling.[1]

Original jurisdiction as to suits.

12. 1. Scope of the Clause.—Clause 11 defines the territorial limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, while this clause, prescribes the classes of suits and the conditions under which they are triable by the High Courts.

Classes of Suits.—Suits of every description may be instituted on the original side of the High Court except suits of the value of one hundred rupees falling within the jurisdiction of the Presidency Small Cause Court.

Conditions.—In suits for land or other immovable property the property should be situated within the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court. See Notes 3 to 5 below. Suits not being for land or other immovable property may be instituted in the High Court if the cause of action wholly arises within the local limits of the original jurisdiction or if the defendant resides or works for gain or carries on business within such limits.[1] But if the cause of action arises only partly within the said limits the leave of the Court is necessary for the institution of the suit.

L. P. Cal., Cl 12, Notes 1—3.

A proceeding commenced by taking out an originating summons in the High Court is a "Suit" within the meaning of this Clause.[1-a]

The restrictive provisions of this clause do not control Cl. 18 below.[2] Nor do they apply to a defendant where, therefore, in a suit on a mortgage, a subsequent mortgagee of immovable property part of which is outside jurisdiction is impleaded as a defendant and he claims to have such property brought to sale, the Court held that he could do so on the ground that the restrictions in Clause 12 apply only to a plaintiff.[3]

2. Ordinary jurisdiction.—"The expression 'ordinary jurisdiction' embraces all such as is exercised in the ordinary course of law and without any special step being necessary to assume it; and . . . it is opposed to 'extraordinary jurisdiction,' which the Court may assume at its discretion upon special occasions and by special orders."[1] A judgment entered up by the High Court under S. 86 of the Old Indian Insolvency Act (11 and 12 Vide Chapter 21) is "not by way of special or discretionary action, but in the ordinary course of the duty cast upon it by law, according to which every other case of the same kind would be dealt with."[2] Matters falling under Clauses 12, 17 and 18 would thus appear to be within the ordinary jurisdiction of the High Court.

3. Suit for land or other immovable property.—On a review of the judicial decisions in India under this Clause, it cannot be said that the term "Suit for land or other immovable property" has been satisfactorily defined so as to afford a uniform criterion applicable to all cases. The only possible definition, as has been pointed out by Coutts-Trotter, C. J. in Valliappa Chetty v. Saha Govind Doss[1] appears to be by an "enumeration of categories" (i.e.) by a reference to the various classes or instances of suits which have been held by the Courts to be suits for land or other immovable property, or not.

THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

The effect of the decisions of the Calcutta High Court bearing on the construction of the term 'suit for land' may be stated as follows:—

Suits for the establishment of title to land[2] or for possession of land[3] or claiming any interest in land, such as a mortgage interest[4] are suits for land.

L. P. Cal., Cl. 12, Note 3.

In suits for reliefs other than those enumerated above it has been fairly uniformly held that a suit is for land or other immovable property if the title to or possession of immovable property is directly and substantially affected. The guiding principle has been stated by Page, J. in Goculdas v. Changanlal[5] and in Provas Chandra v. Ashutosh[5-a] to be to see whether, "having regard to the issues raised in the pleadings, the decree or order will affect directly the proprietary or possessory title to land or other immovable property.'' The mere fact that land has something to do with a suit does not make it a suit for land.[5-b] (In cases falling under this group the question, therefore, mainly turns on the view of the Court in each case as to whether title or possession is directly and substantially affected by the suit).

These cases may be divided into the following classes:—

(a) Suit for a share in the sale proceeds of immovable property.—In Goculdas v. Cheganlal referred to above the plaintiffs claimed their share of the sale proceeds of a joint family house wrongfully sold by the defendants. The defence was, inter alia, that the plaintiffs had no title to the house. Page, J., held that no issue arose in the case that could affect, the title to the premises sold as the title of the purchaser was not challenged, nor the sale sought to be set aside. Both the plaintiffs and defendants approbated the sale and only claimed their share in the proceeds. The dispute did not, therefore, affect the title to the house; but the real question was whether the plaintiffs were members of a Joint Hindu Family at material times.

(b) Suits relating to trust property.—Where the suit is only for the enforcement of a trust in accordance with the terms of the trust deed and no beneficial interest is claimed for the plaintiff, the suit will not be a suit for land merely by reason of the trust property being land or other immovable property.[6] But where the title to the trust property is in dispute it will be a suit for land.[7]

(c) Suits for the administration of the estate of a deceased person.—In a suit by a legatee for the administration of an estate and to set aside various deeds of trust, leases of land and an award, brought about by the fraud of the executor, the Privy Council held that the suit was one primarily for administration and as such not a suit for lands.[8] In Hara Lal v. Nithambriu,[9] where this suit was for the construction of a will, for the administration of the estate and for the present possession of immovable property, it was held that the suit was primarily for possession of immovable property, the other reliefs being only ancillary. Similarly a suit for a declaration of the plaintiffs' title to the whole of the residuary estate of the testator and to avoid certain dedications and for the construction of a will, was held to be one for land the other reliefs being merely incidental to the above reliefs.[10]

(d) Suits for damages in respect of immovable property.—In a suit by one colliery owner against another for damages for cutting the barrier area in the plaintiffs' colliery, the substantial question was held to be one of title to the said barrier area and the suit, a suit for land.[11] But a suit for the damages caused by the erection of certain workshops by the defendant and for an injunction restraining the nuisance caused thereby was held not to be a suit for land.[12] Where in a suit for an injunction and damages for obstruction to the plaintiffs lawfully removing certain buildings the defendants disputed the plaintiffs right to the buildings the Rangoon High Court held that the real dispute in the suit was with reference to immovable property.[13]

(e) A suit for the recovery of title-deeds.—Where the defendant denied the plaintiffs' title to the property was, nevertheless, held to be not a suit for land as no relief, such as possession, in respect to land was involved therein.[14]

(g) Suits for dissolution of partnership.—On an application to file, an award by an arbitrator dissolving a partnership, providing for the sale of immovable property of the partnership, and for the execution of a mortgage by one partner to another for the amount found due by the former it was held that the proceeding was not a suit for land but only for the dissolution of a partnership and for the adjustment of the mutual claims between the partners out of the partnership property.[17]

THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

Except in the case of suits for declaration of title and for possession of immovable property[19-a] which were held to be suits for land the High Court of Bombay till recently approached the question by determining not whether a particular suit was a suit for land within the meaning of Clause 12 but whether it was a suit cognizable by an English Court of Equity. In Holkar v. Dadabhoy[20] it was held that a suit for the specific performance of a contract to execute a mortgage of property outside Bombay and for the recovery of the mortgage debt was within the original jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court. The reasoning was that such a suit was one of the kind in whole a Court of Equity in England could exercise jurisdiction in personam with respect to immovable property lying outside jurisdiction and that the High Court in India had all the jurisdiction of the Equity Courts in England. Clause 12 of the Letters Patent was held not to have taken away such jurisdiction from the High Courts in India. The ratio decidendi of the decision in Holkar's case was adopted in a number of subsequent cases and suits for foreclosure[21] or for the specific performance of a contract to sell[22] were held to lie in the Bombay High Court notwithstanding that the immovable property referred to in the mortgage or contract was outside jurisdiction. In 1924, in Venkatarao v. Khimji,[23] a suit on a mortgage of immovable property outside Bombay was held to lie in the High Court. But the Court in this case went further and laid down that such a suit was not a suit for land but only for a debt. The question was decided with reference to the term "suit for land" in Clause 12 of the Letters Patent rather than on the analogy of the English Equity jurisdiction. The authority of the Holkar's case was not accepted by Fawcett, J., in Yeshwadabai v. Janardhan[24] where he held that a suit for a declaration of a charge for maintenance on immovable property was a 'suit for land'. But in a later case[25] the same Judge, feeling himself bound by Venkatarao v. Khimji[23] held that such a suit though 'a suit for land' would lie in the High Court in the exercise of the equity jurisdiction in personam even if the land was outside Bombay. Venkatarao v. Khimji[23] was followed in Jasraj v. Akubai[26] but was dissented from in India Spinning and Weaving Company v. Climax Syndicate[27] by a Bench of three Judges who held that a suit on a mortgage of immovable property was a suit for land. But ultimately, on a reference to a Full Bench[28] it was decided that a suit to enforce a mortgage of land is not a suit for land within the meaning of Clause 12. This decision has been subsequently followed.[29] A claim as to priority between two or more mortgagees raised in a suit on a mortgage is a claim for the recovery of debts in certain order and not a claim for land.[30]

The Bombay High Court also has held that a suit for administration of the estate of a deceased person is not a suit for land though the estate may consist of immovable property.[31]

The view of the Bombay High Court may therefore be summed up as follows:—Suits for declaration of title to and possession of immovable property are suits for land. Suits on mortgages are not suits for land. In regard to other classes of suits, such as for the specific performance of contract to sell, the authority of Holkar's case must be considered to have been greatly shaken by Venkatarao v. Khimji[23] and the Full Bench case,[28] which preferred to decide the question with reference to the terms of Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent rather than to the doctrine of the equity jurisdiction of the English Courts

THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

The Madras High Court has taken very nearly the same view of the expression "suit for land" as the Calcutta High Court and has extended the scope of the term not only to suits for title or possession but also to suits directly affecting title to or possession of immovable property.[32] A suit for sale on a mortgage[33] or for avoiding a mortgage encumbrance[34] or for creating a charge for maintenance on specific immovable property[35] has been held to be a suit for land. A suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased person[36] or of a trust[37] is not a suit for land though the estate or the trust may concern land. Suits for the recovery of damages for the cutting and removal of trees have, however, been held to be suits for land on the ground that in such suits the right to land is affected.[38]

In Velliappa v. Govinda Doss[39] a Full Bench has held that a suit by a purchaser for the specific performance of an agreement to sell land is not a suit for land, being an action in personam addressed to the defendant personally.

4. "All other cases" suit for partition of property consisting of moveables and immovables, the latter being situated wholly outside jurisdiction.—This clause divides suits in two main groups:—

(1) Suits for land or other immovable property and (2) "all other cases". The latter terms therefore, excludes suits for immovable property. It is only in regard to the jurisdiction in 'all other cases' that the test of cause of action or the residence of the defendant falls to be considered.[1] A suit for the partition of property, consisting of both moveable and immoveable does not fall into the class of "all other cases" but is a suit for land and cannot be tried in the High Court if the immovable property is wholly outside jurisdiction.[2] But the plaint may be amended and proceeded with in so far as the moveable properties alone are concerned.[3]

5. Suit for land partly within and partly without jurisdiction.—The words "either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained in part" must be taken to apply not only to the words "if the cause of action shall have arisen" but also to the words "property shall be situated." The operative words of this clause in so far as they relate to suits for land or other immovable property should therefore be reproduced as follows:—"If, in case of suits for land or other immovable property, such land or property shall be situated, . . . either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits, etc." It follows that in suits for land only partly within the local limits, the Court has jurisdiction to try the whole suit provided the leave of the Court is first obtained.[1] But if no leave is obtained, the Court may entertain the suit only in so far as the property within the local limits is concerned.[2]

The provision for leave contained in this clause with regard to suits for land will not, however, sanction the institution of a suit which would offend the rules as to misjoinder of parties and causes of action. Thus where a mortgagee submortgaged his mortgage interest to the plaintiff over the mortgagors' property situated in the moffusil and included in the submortgage, some of his own property situated in Calcutta, a suit in the Calcutta High Court, by the submortgage against the original mortgagor and the mortgagee to enforce the submortgage cannot lie and no leave cannot be granted though one of the properties in the submortgage is within the local limits of the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court.[3]

6. "Suits of every description."—The High Court has jurisdiction under this clause in suits concerning matrimonial matters among the jews,[1] or among the Parsis except in matters coming within the jurisdiction of a special Court constituted under the Parsi Marriage Act.[2]

7. Cause of action.—See Note to S. 20 and also the following cases.[1]

8. "If the cause of action shall have arisen in part."—Leave of the Court is necessary for the institution of a suit for which a part alone of the cause of action arises within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court.[1]

9. Leave of Court.—Leave to sue is not a formal matter of procedure but is the foundation for the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court.[1] It must therefore, be obtained before the Court becomes empowered to receive, try or determine the suit.[2] Such leave will enure only for the suit[3] or the cause of action[4] for which, or against the defendant[5] in respect of whom, it was granted. Leave must be distinctly applied for and granted, and cannot be implied.[6] It is a judicial act of a Court and cannot be delegated to a ministerial officer.[7]

The grant of leave is a matter within the discretion of the Court.[8] In the exercise of their discretion, the Courts can take into consideration the convenience of parties.[9]

Where leave has been at first granted but it is found that the plaint does not obviously disclose a ground justifying leave, the plaintiff may be permitted, at the trial to allege and prove such a ground, and the plaint may be also amended.[10] In fact, it is quite sufficient if grounds involving difficult questions of fact or law are established to the satisfaction of the Court upon the hearing of the action.[11]

10. Waiver of want of leave.—The question whether the objection to want of can be waived has been considered in a number of cases and there is a divergence of opinion on the point. One view is that the absence of leave amounts to want of inherent jurisdiction in the Court in respect of the suit and that consequently neither waiver nor consent can confer the jurisdiction on the Court.[1] The opposite view is that in such cases there is no inherent lack of jurisdiction, that the want of leave is only a defect in formality and that it can be waived.[2] It is submitted that the former view is correct. Clause 12 of the Letters Patent obviously lays down that the ordinary original jurisdiction in suits can be exercised by the High Court provided only that certain conditions mentioned therein exist. The obtaining of leave is distinctly enjoined as a condition in certain cases and it is provided that such leave shall have been first obtained. The wording of the clause clearly shows that the Court has no power even to "receive" a plaint unless such leave is obtained. The leave contemplated by the clause constitutes as has been seen in Note 9 above the foundation of the existence of jurisdiction and is not a matter of procedure for which provision is made separately in Clauses 37 and 38 of the Letters Patent. Objections to jurisdiction for want of leave can be raised at any time.[3]

In any event, the question of waiver can arise only in a case where the plaintiff alleges facts on the basis of which the necessity for leave arises but not where he alleges grounds which entitle him to sue without any leave. If in the latter case he fails to prove those grounds his suit will be dismissed and no question of waiver can arise by reason of the defendant taking no objection on the score of want of leave.[4]

11. Rescission of leave.—Leave may be granted ex parte but it is open to the defendant to question it.[1] He can appear and apply for revocation of leave without waiting for the trial.[2] He is not, however, bound to make such an application. He can wait and insist on having the legality of the leave tried as an issue at the trial.[3] In fact, it is much better that difficult questions involving issues of fact or law bearing on the grant of leave are decided upon the hearing of the suit.[4] But where heavy costs are likely to be incurred or serious inconveniences caused it is always better to apply for revocation at the earliest possible opportunity.[5]

12. Meaning of the word "defendant".—Where jurisdiction depends on the residence of the business place of the defendant and there are more defendants than one, all of them must reside or carry on business or personally work for gain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court.[1] of the questions involved, or in consequence of the balance of convenience or the cheapness of the trial.[1]

The power of removal is not limited to any particular period or stage of the suit and, so long as the proceedings in the original Court are in such a condition that one party is entitled to ask that Court to determine any question material to the final result of the suit, the suit is in existence in the original Court and is capable of being removed to the High Court under this clause.[2] It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Rangoon that the application under this clause must be made to a Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court and not to a Judge sitting on the appellate side.[3] In the undermentioned Bombay case[4] the application was however made on the appellate side of the High Court.

2. Suit—Meaning of.—Proceedings for the grant of probate which are contested, come within the meaning of the word 'suit' as used in this clause.[1]

3. Transfer of petition from Provincial Insolvency Court.—An application under this clause to remove an insolvency petition pending in a moffussil Court and to transfer it for trial and disposal to the original side of the High Court is not maintainable.[1] The reason is that the powers conferred by S. 5, of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) which are made subject to the other provisions of the Act, cannot be exercised in such a way as to give the original side of the High Court a jurisdiction from which it is expressly excluded by the terms of that section read with this clause.

4. Subject to its superintendence.—The civil Court of the Political Resident at Aden, as constituted by the Aden Courts' Act (II of 1864), is subject to the superintendence of the High Court at Bombay within the meaning of this clause, even though no appeal lies to the High Court from decrees or orders of the Resident, and therefore, the High Court has power to remove under this clause a suit from that Court to itself for trial and determination.[1]

5. Transfer of suit from Presidency Small Cause Court.—The Presidency Small Cause Court is a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court. The latter can, therefore, remove to itself under this clause a suit pending before such Small Cause Court.[1]

6. Powers of High Court in suits transferred under this clause.—In dealing with suits transferred under this clause, the High Court has no more powers than those of the Court from which the suit is transferred.[1] Thus the High Court cannot allow an amendment of a plaint in a suit transferred from the Madras City Civil Court, so as to convert it into one which such City Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to try.[2] Under S. 14 of the Madras City Civil Court Act (VII of 1892) it is specifically provided that the Court-fee payable on a suit so transferred from the Madras City Civil Court must be calculated according to the rules in force in the High Court in relation to suits filed on the original side of the High Court.[3]

7. High Court's power to receive plaints.—This clause provides only that the High Court may remove to itself a suit pending in a Court subject to its superintendence. It does not enable the High Court to receive a plaint in a suit cognisable by a moffusil Court and pass orders thereon.[1]

8. Appeal.—The High Court of Madras has held that an order of a Judge of the High Court on the original side transferring to the High Court a suit under this clause is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15, infra and is therefore appealable.[1] But the Calcutta High Court has taken a contrary view.[2] See also notes to Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, infra.

Where an application under this clause was heard and granted by a Bench sitting on the appellate side of the Bombay High Court leave was granted to appeal to the Privy Council.[3]

Joinder of several causes of action.

14. And We do further ordain that where plaintiff has several causes of action against defendant, such causes of action not being for land or other immoveable property, and the said High Court shall have original jurisdiction in respect of one of such causes of action, it shall be lawful for the said High Court to call on the defendant to show cause why the several causes of action should not be joined together in one suit, and to make such order for trial of the same as to the said High Court shall seem fit.

Synopsis.

1. Joinder of several causes of action.
2. "Such causes of action not being for land."

1. Joinder of several causes of action.—The word "several" in the expression "several causes of action" means separate.[1] This clause applies only where some causes of action arise within and some without the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court. It does not apply to cases where all the several causes of action arise within such jurisdiction.[2] It is not necessary that the causes of action outside the ordinary original jurisdiction, should have arisen within the extraordinary original jurisdiction contemplated by Cl. 13, ante.. They may arise even outside the Presidency.[3]

An application under this clause for leave to join several causes of action can be made also in a case in which leave has to be or has been obtained under Cl. 12, ante.[4]

To bring a case within this clause it is not necessary that the defendant should admit that any cause of action has arisen within the original jurisdiction of the High Court.[5]

2. "Such causes of action not being for land".—The expression "such causes of action not being for land'' qualifies the words ''several causes of action'' and refers to cases ''where plaintiff has several causes of action other than causes of action for land or other immovable property''. That is to say, in considering this clause any cause of action which is for land or other immovable property must be excluded, and if the sole cause of action within jurisdiction is one for land, or if the sole cause of action outside the jurisdiction is one for land, then this clause will have no operation.[1]

1. Amendment.—Under the old clause[1] as it stood before the amendment thereof in 1928[1-a] an appeal lay from

(1) the decision of a single Judge in all cases other than (a) orders passed in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction,
  (b) sentences or orders passed in the exercise of the power of superintendence under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915,
  (c) sentences or orders passed in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction.
(2) the decision of the Senior Judge where the Judges constituting a bench of two Judges differed.

The effect of the amendment of the clause is that there is now no right of appeal against decisions of a single Judge in second appeal except where the Judge declares that the case is a fit one for appeal. The right of appeal against the decisions of the senior Judge where the Judges constituting a bench differ, has been taken away in view of the newly amended Cl. 36, infra and there is now no power to grant a certificate in such a case.[2]

After the amendment came into force there arose a conflict of opinion as to whether it had retrospective effect. According to the High Court of Bombay[3] it had such effect, so that no appeal lay against a judgment of a single Judge, in second appeal filed after the amendment in the absence of the requisite certificate. The High Courts of Calcutta[4] and Madras[5] held on the other hand, that the amendment did not operate retrospectively so as to affect the right of appeal which had accrued in respect of suits instituted prior to the amendment. According to the High Court of Allahabad[6] all judgments delivered after the amendment were governed by the amended clause. In order to set this conflict at rest, the clause was again amended and the words “on or after the first day of February 1929” have been added.

2. “Judgment,” meaning of.—The definition of the word “judgment” given in S. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code is intended for the construction of the term as used in the Code and is not applicable to the Letters Patent.[1] There is no definition of the word in the Letters Patent. On the other hand, it seems to have been used in different senses in the various clauses. Thus this clause uses the word “judgment”, while Cl. 39 uses the words “judgment, decree or order,” and Cl. 40 the words, “preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree or order”.[1-a] There has thus arisen a considerable conflict of opinion as to the true interpretation of the word “judgment” as used in this Clause. In Hurrish Chandra Chowdhry v. Kalisundery Debi, I.L.R. 9 Cal 482, where a single Judge of the High Court had passed an order refusing to transmit an order of Her Majesty in Council, for execution, their Lordships of the Privy Council said, “Mr. Justice Pontifex had in fact exer-

Clause 14—Note 1.

[1] The old clause ran as follows:—

> “And we do further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, from the judgment (not being an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction and not being a sentence or order passed or made in the exercise of the power of superintendence under the provisions of S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, or in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction) of one Judge of the said High Court or one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to section 13 of the said recited Act, and that an appeal shall also lie to the said High Court from the judgment (not being a sentence or order as aforesaid) of two or more Judges of the said High Court, or of such Division Court, whenever such Judges are equally divided in opinion, and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the said High Court, at the time being; but that the right of appeal from other judgments of the Judges of the said High Court, or of such Division Court, shall be to Us, Our heirs or Successors in Our or Their Privy Council, as hereinafter provided.”

cised a judicial discretion and had come to a decision of great importance, which, if it remained would entirely conclude any rights of Kalisunderi to an execution in this suit,'' and they held that the order was a ''judgment''. This, however, was not a complete definition of the term. In Bhogi Lal v. The Dakore Temple Committee[2] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the term ''judgment'' in the Letters Patent meant in civil cases a decree and not a ''judgment'' in the ordinary sense. The High Court of Allahabad has distinguished this case on the ground that their Lordships must be deemed to have made the observation referred to with reference to Cl. 39 of the Letters Patent and not with reference to this Clause.[3]

We now proceed to discuss the views of the various High Courts on the question.

According to the High Court of Allahabad the provisions of this clause are controlled by the Code of Civil Procedure and the right of appeal under this Clause is restricted to cases which are appealable under the Code.[4] But in a later case of the same High Court,[4-a] the view in 35 Mad. 1 F. B. (discussed below) has been adopted. This view has been dissented from by the other High Courts. See Note 6 to S. 104, ante and the cases cited below.[5]

The leading case on what may be called the Calcutta view as to the meaning of the word ''judgment'' is The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co.,[6] in which Couch, C. J. defined it as meaning "a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it leaving other matters to be determined''. The ''right or liability'' must mean some right or liability which is the subject-matter of controversy in the suit or proceeding. It has, however, been held by the same High Court purporting to follow the case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta, that an order granting leave to sue under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent[7] or an order setting aside an abatement[8] or an order rejecting an application for a judgment on admissions under O. 12, R. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code[9] is a judgment, on the ground that they must be taken to determine some right. These decisions, it is submitted, cannot be supported even on the basis of the definition which they purport to adopt. In none of these cases are the merits affected and there is no determination of any right or liability which is the matter in controversy in the suit or proceeding. In Ebrahim v. Fackrunisa Begam[10], Garth, C. J., expressed the view that the word ''judgment'' means ''a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory nature which merely decides some isolated point not affecting the merits or the results of the whole suit''. A similar view was adopted in the cases cited below.[11] In Mt. Brijkumari v. Ramrick Dass,[12] Mclean, C. J., was of opinion that the definition of Couch, C. J., was becoming classical, but that it was not exhaustive.[13] In Brojogopal Roy Burman v.

L. P. Cal., Cl. 15, Note 2.

Amarchandra Bhattacharya, I. L. R. 56 Cal. 135 F. B., it was held, that the mere fact that an order puts in peril the finality of a decision given in a person's favour, does not, of itself, make the order a "judgment" within the meaning of this Clause. It was doubted whether such orders as an order setting aside an abatement or an order giving leave to appeal could be considered as "judgments".

The definition of Couch, C. J., given above has been accepted generally in the Bombay High Court.[14]

The earliest attempt to define the word "judgment" as used in this clause was made by the High Court of Madras in DeSouza v. Coles,[15] and it was held that it meant any decision or determination affecting the rights or interests of the suitor or applicant. It was also pointed out that it was not possible to prescribe any limit to the right of appeal conferred by this clause. This definition has, however, been considered to be very wide and has not been followed. The leading case on the point at present in the High Court of Madras is that of Tuljaram Rao v. Alagappa, I. L. R. 35 Mad 1 F. B. In that case, Sir Arnold White, C. J., laid down the view that an order is a "judgment" within the meaning of this clause.

(i) if its effect is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or

(ii) if the non-compliance therewith will have the effect of putting an end to such suit or proceeding, or

(iii) if it is passed on an independent proceeding which is ancillary to the suit, (not instituted as a step towards judgment, but with a view to rendering the judgment effective when obtained), e.g., an order on an application for temporary injunction or for the appointment of a receiver.

In Gokalchand v. Sanwal Das,[16] the High Court of Lahore was of opinion that the term "judgment" included any interlocutory judgment which decided so far as the Court pronouncing it was concerned, whether finally or temporarily, any question materially in issue between the parties and directly affecting the subject-matter of the suit. In Ruddu Singh v. Sanwal,[17] the same High Court adopted the view of White, C. J., of the Madras High Court.

In Arumugham Chetty v. Kanappa Chetty,[18] the High Court of Rangoon held that where an appeal lies from an order under O. 43, R. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code the order must be taken to be a "judgment" within the meaning of this Clause. In Chidambaram Chettiar v. N. A. Chettiar Firm[19] a Full Bench of the same High Court has adopted the view of White, C. J.

The High Court of Patna,[20] has adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court as expressed in the case of Brojo Gopal Roy Burman referred to above.

An examination of all the cases on the subject goes to show that the test applied by White C. J., in Tuljaram Rao's case affords the best solution of the conflict of decisions on the point. An examination of the orders specified in the Civil Procedure Code as being appealable also shows that the Legislature, in making those provisions, has followed principles which are analogous to those laid down by White, C. J. Thus the orders referred to in Cls. (p) to (s) of R. 1 of O. 43, C.P.C., are really orders in ancillary proceedings instituted with a view to make the judgment that may be ultimately obtained effective.

The other clauses specify orders which, so far as the Court is concerned will have the effect of putting an end to the suit or proceeding. It is, therefore, submitted that the test applied by White, C. J., is correct on principle. The cases in which the orders have been held to be "judgments" have all been grouped below so as to show that they can all be supported on the principles laid down in Tuljaram Rao's case, though, the reasons for the decisions in the various cases differ considerably.

Orders which have been held to be "judgments" and which can be supported on the ground that they have the effect of putting an end to the suit or proceeding, so far as the Court, before which the suit or proceeding is pending, is concerned:—

(1) Order refusing to entertain a suit as being bad for multifariousness.[21]

(2) Order refusing to add necessary parties in a suit under S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.[22]

(3) Order refusing to allow a plaint to be amended and dismissing suit.[23]

(4) Order refusing to restore suit dismissed for default. See Note 12 to O. 9, R. 9, Civil Procedure Code.

(5) Finding on a preliminary issue which has the effect of disposing of the suit.[24]

(6) Order varying or amending a decree.[25]

(7) Order dismissing a claim petition under O. 21, R. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code. See Note 24 to O. 21, R. 58. The High Court of Rangoon has, however, held that such an order does not prevent the determination of the rights of the parties in a separate suit and that, therefore, it is not a judgment.[26] It is submitted that this view is not correct. So far as the Court in which the claim proceeding is pending is concerned, the order clearly puts an end to the proceeding.

(8) Order rejecting an application to set aside an abatement of a suit or refusing the application of the assignee of the plaintiff to be allowed to continue the proceedings. See Note 14 to O. 22, R. 9 and Note 21 to O. 22, R. 10.

(9) Order allowing the withdrawal of a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit or refusing to set aside an order allowing such withdrawal. See Note 40 to O. 23, R. 1.

(10) Order refusing leave to sue in forma pauperis. See Note 8 to O. 33, R. 5. The decision in the case cited below[27] that an order allowing an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is a judgment as against the principle of Tuljaram Rao's case and cannot be accepted as correct.

(11) Order dismissing application praying that the Court may receive a sum of money as security for the costs of an appeal. See Note 14 to O. 41, R. 10.

(12) Order refusing to set aside a dismissal of an appeal for default.[28]

(1) An order granting leave to sue as a pauper.[1]

(3) An order refusing to revoke leave to sue which has been granted.[3]

(14) An order refusing directions under Rr. 130 and 131 of the High Court Rules, Bombay.[15]

(15) An order directing security under O. 38, R. 5.[16] This would be a "judgment" according to the test applied by White, C. J., in Thuljaram Rao's case, inasmuch as it is an order in an ancillary proceeding instituted with a view to render the judgment effective. In view of the Full Bench decision in A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 41 adopting the Madras view, the correctness of this decision is open to question.

(23) An order refusing to extend time under S. 148 for giving security in an interlocutory application. It may be noted that the main proceeding before the Court in this case would not be affected by the dismissal of the interlocutory application for failure to give security in time.[27]

(32) An order directing the issue of notice to respondents in Europe.[36]

(33) An order of remand in appeal directing the trial of a particular issue keeping the case in file.[37]

NOTE.—An order of remand of the whole case is a "judgment"—See Note 2 above.

(34) An order made at the settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of the suit was held to be appealable in the undermentioned case by the High Court of Madras.[38] But this decision has been dissented from in the later Full Bench in I.L.R. 35 Mad. 1 and is not good law. Such an order would not be appealable as it merely relates to procedure.

4. Orders in proceedings other than suits and appeals.—The following are among the orders in miscellaneous proceedings which have been held to be appealable as judgments under this clause. As to whether and how far these decisions can be regarded as correct or principle, see the discussion as to the meaning of the word "judgment" in Note 2 above:—

revoke a submission to arbitration;[19] or an order remitting the award to arbitrators to make a fresh award.[20] An order under S. 19 of the Act refusing to stay proceedings is appealable according to the High Court of Calcutta[21] but not appealable according to the High Court of Rangoon.[22]

(11) In the undermentioned case[23] it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that in proceedings under the Guardian and Wards Act, 1890, it has inherent jurisdiction to hear an appeal apart from the provision of this clause.

The following orders have been held not appealable:—

(1) An order directing the issue of a Mandamus.[24] A contrary opinion has been however expressed in the Madras Full Bench case cited below.[25]

(2) An order admitting an appeal under S. 5 of the Limitation Act.[26] decision appealed from is in revision or in second appeal, but the party aggrieved has a right of second appeal, it must be deemed to be one passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction.[2]

6. Orders made in the exercise of powers of superintendence.—This clause excludes a right of appeal in the case of orders passed in the exercise of the powers of superintendence under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, such orders are, therefore, not appealable under this clause.[1]

7. Orders passed in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction.—No appeal lies under this clause against an order passed by a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction.[1] An order of sanction to prosecute under S. 195, Cr. P. Code, is an order made in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction and not appealable under this clause.[2] Similarly, an order of a Judge of the High Court staying a criminal trial is not a "judgment" appealable under this clause.[3]

8. Appeal to Privy Council.—A decision of the High Court in an appeal under this clause is appealable to the Privy Council.[1]

9. Appeal in cases of disagreement among Judges of a Division Bench—See also S. 98.—Prior to the amendment of this clause in 1928, there was a right of appeal from the decision of the senior Judge where the Judges of a Division Bench were equally divided in opinion. As noticed in Note 1, ante, such a right of appeal has now been taken away. The cases cited below[1] which were decided under the old clause prior to the amendment in 1928, are now no longer law, and are only of academic interest.

10. S. 175 of Agra Tenancy Act, if precludes appeal.—Section 175 of the N. W. P. Tenancy Act does not effect or preclude the right of appeal conferred by this clause.[1]

11. "Declares that the case is a fit one for appeal."—Under the present clause an appeal lies from the decision of a single Judge of the High Court passed in second appeal only where the Judge who passed the judgment declares that the case is a fit one for appeal.[1] No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to when a Judge should grant or refuse leave to appeal. The mere fact that the decision of the lower appellate Court is reversed by the High Court or the fact that the valuation of the appeal is beyond a particular figure, does not by itself entitle the petitioner to a grant of leave to appeal. The jurisdiction to grant leave should not, however, be exercised arbitrarily or capriciously but in a judicial manner having regard to all the circumstances of the case.[2] The High Court of Bombay in a recent decision[3] has held that in the matter of granting leave under this clause the Court should be guided by the same principles as those governing leave to appeal to the Privy Council. It has accordingly refused to grant leave holding that the case is not one of great public or private importance or involving questions which may be important precedents governing numerous other cases.

An order refusing leave to appeal under this clause is not appealable.[4]

In the case cited below, the High Court of Rangoon[5] rejected an application for leave to appeal which was filed four months after the judgment in second appeal.

12. Cross objections.—It has been held that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to cross objections do not apply to appeals under this clause.[1]

13 Security for costs.—In an appeal under this clause, the High Court has power to direct the appellant to furnish security for costs, and on his failure to comply therewith it can reject the appeal under the provisions of O. 41, R. 10 (2) of the Code.[1]

14 Points on which appeal may be heard.—It is not ordinarily open to the parties to raise in an appeal under this clause a contention which has not been urged before the Court from the judgment of which the appeal is preferred[1] unless the point is one relating to jurisdiction or raises a pure question of law.[2] But the Court is not, however, confined to facts and circumstances as disclosed on the judgment appealed against; it is entitled to look into the judgment of the lower appellate Court.[3]

Wrong exercise of discretion—Whether may be a ground of appeal.—The High Court of Allahabad[4] has held that an order passed in the exercise of judicial discretion vested in a single Judge of the High Court is not appealable as a "judgment" under this Clause. The High Court of Madras[5] has, on the other hand, held that "the fact of a matter being within the discretion of the original Judge is not a ground for refusing to entertain the appeal but a sufficient reason for declining to interfere with that discretion".

15. Limitation.—Provision has been made in the rules framed by various High Courts as to the period within which an appeal under this clause is to be filed. Under the rules framed by the High Courts of Allahabad,[1] Lahore,[2] Patna[3] and Rangoon[4] the memorandum of appeal under this clause need not be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or decree appealed from. Hence it has been held that an appellant is not entitled to claim the benefit of an extension or exclusion of time under Ss. 4 and 12 of the Limitation Act.

See also the undermentioned cases.[5]

16. Court-fee.—Prior to the amendment of S. 4 of the Court Fees Act by Act XXXIX of 1922, it was held in the undermentioned cases[1] that a memorandum of appeal under this clause was not liable to any Court-fee inasmuch as S. 4 did not provide for appeals under this clause. But under the amended Court Fees Act, it is liable for payment of Court-fee under Sch. I, Art. 1.

17. Review.—See Note 1 to S. 114 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the case cited below.[1]

18. Practice.—Section 117 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the provisions of the Code shall apply to High Courts save as otherwise provided, and O. 49, R. 3 exempts only certain provisions of the Code as not being applicable to the High Courts. Hence in a Letters Patent Appeal under this Clause the High Court can apply the provisions of O. 41, R. 11[1] or proceed under O. 41, R. 10.[2] But as already noticed in Note 10 to S. 105, the provisions of this Clause are not controlled by S. 105 and an order of remand though not appealed against can be challenged in an appeal under this Clause against the final judgment.[3]

An appeal under this Clause cannot be proceeded with if necessary parties are not impleaded.[4] In the undermentioned case[5] the High Court of Madras allowed an appeal under this Clause against an order rejecting an application for leave to appeal as a pauper under O. 44, R. 1 without issuing notice to the respondent observing that such a procedure was in conformity with the practice of that Court.

L. P. Cal., Cl. 16, Notes 1—3.

Synopsis.

1. Appeal from Courts in Provinces.
2. "Civil Courts."
3. "Subject to its superintendence."

1. Appeal from Courts in Provinces.—The constitution of the High Court as a Court of appeal is quite different from its jurisdiction to hear appeals from every decree or order passed by a Subordinate Court. If there is no law or regulation which allows an appeal to the High Court in a particular case, it cannot assume appellate jurisdiction in respect of that matter.[1]

2. "Civil Courts."—The terms "Civil Courts" in this clause does not cover a tribunal created under a particular statute for a particular purpose. Thus, no appeal will lie to the High Court against the decision of a commissioner acting as an election Court under the provisions of the United Provinces Municipalities Act (II of 1916).[1]

3. "Subject to its superintendence."—This clause provides that every Civil Court of a Province is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court and S. 107 of the Government of India Act provides that every Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court is subject to its powers of superintendence. Reading these two together, it follows that every civil Court in a province or Presidency is subject to the High Courts right of superintendence.[1]

The High Court of Madras has held that a Revenue Divisional Officer exercising jurisdiction under S. 7 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices' Act (III of 1895) is not a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court within the meaning of this Clause.[2]

17. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal shall have the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estates of infants, idiots and lunatics within the Presidency of [Madras,] [Bombay], Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William as that which is now vested in the said High Court immediately before the publication of these presents.

Synopsis.

1. Jurisdiction as to infants and lunatics.
2. Power of High Court to appoint guardian in the case of minor members of Hindu joint families.

1. Jurisdiction as to infants and lunatics.—The High Court as the successor and inheritor of the powers of the Old Supreme Court, has no jurisdiction under this Clause over natives of India with respect to the persons and estates of infants, idiots and lunatics, who reside outside the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court.[1] But in respect of European British Subjects the High Court could exercise jurisdiction under this Clause even though these parties reside outside of and have no property within the limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction.[2]

2. Power of High Court to appoint guardian in the case of minor members of Hindu joint families.—Although a guardian cannot be appointed under the Guardians

Provision with respect to the Insolvent Court.

And We do further ordain that the Court for relief of Insolvent Debtors at [Madras] [Bombay], Calcutta shall be held before one of the Judges of the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal and the said High Court, and any such Judge thereof, shall have and exercise, within the Presidency of [Madras] [Bombay], Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William such powers and authorities with respect to original and appellate jurisdiction and otherwise as are constituted by the laws relating to insolvent debtors in India.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of the Clause.
2. Laws relating to insolvent-debtors.

1. Scope of the Clause.—The insolvency jurisdiction and the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court are separately dealt with in the Letters Patent. Therefore Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, ante, does not control the provisions of this Clause so as to limit the insolvency jurisdiction of the Court. Thus the High Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate in insolvency proceedings on claims relating to immovable property situated outside the limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.[1]

2. Laws relating to insolvent debtors.—The law of insolvency applicable to the High Courts is now laid down in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909). Prior to that Act, The Insolvent Debtor's Act (Stat. 11 and 12, Vict., c. 21) was applicable. As to cases under the latter Act, see undermentioned cases.[1] or equity to be applied to the cases coming before the High Court shall be the law or equity which would have been applied by the Supreme Courts at Calcutta, Bombay and Madras respectively.[1] By the Charters constituting the Supreme Courts, they were expressly made Courts of equity and given equitable jurisdiction corresponding to that of the Court of Chancery in England. And the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras have now succeeded to the jurisdiction conferred upon their predecessors, the supreme Courts and exercise the same equitable jurisdiction.[2] But such jurisdiction cannot be employed to subvert the native substantive laws. It only affords a means of continually ameliorating them and so preventing their desuetude by a system of rules borrowed from the English Courts of equity.[3]

2. Applicability of English law.—According to the Charter Acts "Justice, equity and good conscience" are the true guides and therefore the High Court on the original side is not bound to decide questions on the basis of English precedents and English Common Law Procedure, where the following of such precedents and procedure may be against "justice, equity and good conscience".[1]

By the High Court in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

21. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have ordinary original criminal jurisdiction within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction and also in respect of all such persons both within the limits of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, and beyond such limits and not within the limits of the criminal jurisdiction of any other High Court or Court established by competent legislative authority for India as the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have criminal jurisdiction over at the date of the publication of these presents.

1. Scope.—It has been held by the High Court of Madras in the undermentioned case[1] that the principle of S. 119, Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is a rule of equity and can be applied to a case not governed by that Act.

Cl. 19—Note 1.

Criminal Jurisdiction.

Ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court.

22. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Calcutta, [Madras,] [Bombay] shall have ordinary original criminal jurisdiction, within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, and also in respect of all such persons, beyond such limits, over whom the said High Court of Judicature at Calcutta [Madras,] [Bombay] shall have criminal jurisdiction at the date of the publication of these presents.

Cl. 23.

Jurisdiction as to persons.

23. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay,] Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction, shall be empowered to try all persons brought before it in due course of law.

Cl 24, Notes 1—3.

Extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction.

24. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal shall have extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction over all persons residing in places within the jurisdiction of any Court now subject to the superintendence of the said High Court, and shall have authority to try at its discretion any such persons brought before it on charges preferred by the Advocate-General, or by any Magistrate or other officer specially empowered by the Government in that behalf.

Synopsis.

1. Extraordinary criminal jurisdiction.
2. Subject to the superintendence of the High Court.
3. Practice in the Calcutta High Court.

1. Extraordinary criminal jurisdiction.—The High Court can under this Clause remove a criminal case from the moffusil and have it before itself.[1] Where a commitment is made to the High Court Sessions in a case in which the Sessions Court of a division has local jurisdiction, the High Court can, on grounds of expediency and convenience, direct the trial to proceed in the High Court itself and the commitment is not liable to be quashed for want of jurisdiction.[2]

2. Subject to the superintendence of the High Court.—The Court of the Judicial Superintendent of Railways in the Nizam's Dominions is subordinate to the High Court of Bombay in respect of all criminal matters relating to European British Subjects.[1] The Criminal Courts in Santal Parganas subordinate to the Sessions Court have been declared by Regulation V of 1893 to be not subordinate to the High Court and therefore are not subject to its superintendence.[2]

3. Practice in the Calcutta High Court.—An application to exercise the jurisdiction under this Clause must be made, according to Ch. 37, R. 2 of the Crown Side Rules of the Calcutta High Court, on the appellate side.[1]

No appeal from High Court exercising original jurisdiction—Court may reserve points of law.

25. And We do further ordain that there shall be no appeal to the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal from any sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial before the Courts of original criminal jurisdiction which may be constituted by one or more Judges of the said High Court. But it shall be at the discretion of any such Court to reserve any point or points of law for the opinion of the said High Court.

Cl. 26, Notes 1—3.

High Court to review on certificate of the Advocate-General.

26. And We do further ordain that, on such point or points of law being so reserved as aforesaid, or on its being certified by the said Advocate-General that, in his judgment, there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the Court of original criminal jurisdiction, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said Court should be further considered, the said High Court shall have full power and authority to review the case, or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of original jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the said High Court shall seem right.

Synopsis.

1. Scope of Clauses 25 and 26.
2. The certificate of the Advocate-General.
3. Procedure at the hearing.
4. Power of Court on review.
5. Decision under the Criminal Law Amendment Act.

1. Scope of Clauses 25 and 26.—The High Court may review a decision of the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction in the two following cases:—

(1) Where the trial Court reserves any point or points of law for the opinion of the High Court (Cl. 25).

(2) Where the Advocate-General certifies, that in his judgment there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the trial Court, or that a point or points of law so decided should be further considered (Cl. 26).

The point or points of law on which the Advocate-General certifies an error in the decision thereof is not confined to the point reserved by the Trial Court under Cl. 25, ante.[1]

2. The certificate of the Advocate-General.—The certificate is presumably granted in the interests of justice after a careful consideration of all available materials. It should not be a mere surmise, but should reflect the judgment of the Advocate-General.[1] But whether the certificate is granted after careful consideration of the materials or not, when once it is granted, the High Court is bound to deal with the case.[2]

3. Procedure at the hearing.—At the hearing of the case on review, the counsel for the accused should begin and have a right of reply.[1] When a Court is called upon to review

a case under this Clause, it will accept as unquestionable the statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him.2

4. Power of Court on review.—The High Court is empowered, after deciding the point reserved or certified to pass such judgment or sentence as it may think right. In other words it can upon reviewing the whole case either quash or confirm the conviction.1 But this can however be done only when the High Court decides that there has been an error of law; if there has been no such error there is no power to deal with the case further.2 Otherwise, an accused person who could obtain a certificate under this clause could, in effect, obtain an appeal on the severity of his sentence, while an accused who could not obtain such a certificate, would not have the same privilege.

The High Court has no power under this clause to remit the case for a fresh trial3 or to reopen any question decided by the trial Judge other than the one reserved or certified.4

5. Decision under the Criminal Law Amendment Act.—The judgment of a special Criminal Bench constituted under S. 6 of the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908 is open to review under this clause on a certificate granted by the Advocate-General.1

Cl. 27, Note 1.

Appeal from Criminal Courts in the Provinces.

27. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal shall be a Court of appeal from the Criminal Courts of the Presidency of [Madras,] [Bombay], Bengal division of the Presidency of Fort William and from all other Courts, subject to its superintendence, and shall exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as are subject to appeal to the said High Court by virtue of any law now in force.

Subject to its superintendence. See Note 1, Pt. (2).

1. Criminal appellate jurisdiction.—The High Court has been declared under this clause to be a general Court of Criminal appeal, the actual exercise of the appellate jurisdiction being defined by the concluding portion of this clause.1

It has been held in the undermentioned case2 that the general power of superintendence conferred by S. 107 of the Government of India Act is different from the superintendence spoken of in this clause.

Hearing of referred cases and revision of criminal trials.

28. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal shall be a Court of reference and revision from the Criminal Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and shall have power to hear and determine all such cases referred to it by the Sessions Judges, or by any other Officers now authorized to refer cases to the said High Court, and to revise all such cases tried by any officer or Court possessing criminal jurisdiction, as are now subject to reference or to revision by the said High Court.

1. Criminal revisional jurisdiction.—The High Court has a general power of Superintendence under this clause over the Criminal Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction. It can revise the decisions of such Courts. It is also a Court of reference empowered to determine references made by the Sessions Judges or by any such officer as is referred to in this clause. The High Court of Bombay has, thus, power to quash proceedings before a village Patil under its powers of superintendence.[1] It cannot under this clause revise an order of the Secretary to the Bengal Government issuing a warrant under the Goondas Act (I of 1923), inasmuch as such person was not an officer possessing criminal jurisdiction at the time of the issue of the Letters Patent.[2]

The High Court hearing a reference under S. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code hears it as a Court of reference in the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in it under this clause and not in its original criminal jurisdiction.[3]

As to whether the High Court can revise an order of discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate, see the undermentioned cases.[4]

Cl. 29, Note 1.

High Court may direct the transfer of a case from one Court to another.

29. And We do further ordain that the said High Court shall have power to direct the transfer of any criminal case or appeal from any Court to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction, and also to direct the preliminary investigation or trial of any criminal case by any officer or Court otherwise competent to investigate or try it, though such case belongs, in ordinary course, to the jurisdiction of some other officer or Court.

Equal or inferior jurisdiction. See Note 1, Pt. (1).

Power of High Court to stay proceedings. See Note 1, Pt. (4).

1. Transfer of Criminal Case.—Under this clause the High Court is empowered to direct the transfer of any criminal case to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction[1] The words "from any Court" must be read as "from any Court subordinate to the High Court's authority". Thus the Allahabad High Court has no jurisdiction to transfer a case from a panchayat constituted under the provisions of the United Provinces Act VI of 1920.[2]

The word "Criminal Case" in this clause will include proceedings under S. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.[3]

The power of superintendence conferred by this clause includes by implication the power to send for the record of any case pending in the Lower Courts; this must necessarily have the effect of staying further proceedings in the case in that Court. The High Court has power, therefore, to stay criminal proceedings instituted on a sanction by a Civil Court under S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code till the disposal of the appeal from the Civil Court.[4]

See also the undermentioned case.[5]

2. Practice of the Calcutta High Court.—An application to exercise the jurisdiction conferred by this clause must be made according to Ch. 37, R. 2 of the Crown Side Rules on the appellate side of the Calcutta High Court.[1]

Offenders to be punished under Indian Penal Code.

30. And We do further ordain that all persons brought for trial before the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal either in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a court of appeal, reference or revision, charged with any offence for which provision is made by Act No. XLV of 1860, called the "Indian Penal Code," or by any Act amending or excluding the said Act which may have been passed prior to the publication of these presents, shall be liable to punishment under the said Act or Acts, and not otherwise.

1. Offenders to be punished under the Indian Penal Code.—The offenders brought for trial before the High Court should be punished only under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code; the High Court cannot engraft thereon the rules of the Common Law of England.[1]

Exercise of jurisdiction elsewhere than at the ordinary place of sitting of the High Court.

Judges may be authorised to sit in any place by way of circuit or special commission.

31. And We do further ordain that whenever it shall appear to the Governor in Council convenient that the jurisdiction and power by these Our Letters Patent or by the recited Act, vested in the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal should be exercised in any place within the jurisdiction of any Court now subject to the superintendence of the said High Court other than the usual place of sitting of the said High Court, or at several such places by way of circuit, the proceedings in cases before the said High Court at such place or places shall be regulated by any law relating thereto, which has been or may be made by competent legislative authority for India.

Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Jurisdiction.

Civil.

32. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal shall have and exercise all such civil and maritime jurisdiction as may now be exercised by the said High Court as a Court of Admiralty, or of Vice-Admiralty, and also such jurisdiction for the trial and adjudication of prize causes and other maritime questions arising in India as may now be exercised by the said High Court.

Synopsis.

1. Civil and maritime jurisdiction.
2. Necessaries supplied to a ship.

1. Civil and maritime jurisdiction.—The effect of this clause is to vest the High Courts with such civil and maritime jurisdiction as might have been exercised by the Supreme Courts under their respective charters.[1]

2. Necessaries supplied to a ship.—Before the passing of the statute 3 and 4 Vict., Ch., 65, it was held in England that the Court of Admiralty in England "had no jurisdiction in the case of necessaries supplied to a ship, though perhaps it occasionally purported to exercise the jurisdiction where, not prohibited."[1] The same view was also held in India.[2] It was also held subsequently in the undermentioned cases[3] that the powers conferred by the above statute as extended by 24 Vict., Ch., 10 (the Admiralty Courts Act of 1861), did not become vested in the High Courts by virtue of their several Letters Patents. But, at present, the jurisdiction of the High Court in relation to necessaries surplied to a ship rests on the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, 53 and 54 Vict., Ch. 27, which vests in it inter alia the powers described in S. 5 of 24 Vict., Ch. 10. And under S. 5 of the latter statute the High Court, in its Admiralty side has jurisdiction over any claim for necessaries supplied to any ship elsewhere than in the part to which the ship Court belongs.[4]

1. Letters Patent, Bombay and Madras.—For Bombay and Madras after the words "exercised by the said High Court" read as follows:—

"In relation to the granting of Probates of last wills and testaments and letters of administration of the goods, chattels, credits, and all other effects of persons dying intestate whether within or without the Presidency of Bombay, Madras)."

2. Testamentary and intestate jurisdiction.—The High Court of Madras has held that it has no jurisdiction to grant probate of the will of a testator, or letters of administration to the estate of an intestate, who did not dwell and who did not leave assets within the limits of the Madras Presidency.[1]

The High Court acting under S. 302 of the Indian Succession Act, XXXIX of 1925 acts in pursuance of the jurisdiction vested in it under this clause and not in its ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction.[2]

Matrimonial Jurisdiction.

Cl. 35, Notes 1—2.

Matrimonial jurisdiction.

35. And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay,] Fort William in Bengal shall have jurisdiction, within the Presidency of [Madras,] [Bombay,] Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William in matters matrimonial between Our subjects professing the Christian religion: Provided always that nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere with the exercise of any jurisdiction in matters matrimonial by any Court not established by Royal Charter within the said Presidency lawfully possessed thereof.

Synopsis.

1. "Between our subjects professing the Christian religion."
2. Both parties other than Christians.
3. Respondent not within the Presidency.
4. Matters matrimonial.

1. "Between our subjects professing the Christian religion."—This clause was intended to replace, in a wider and modern form, the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and its scope was confined to proceedings in which both the parties were Christians.[1] See also Paragraph 33 of the Despatch from the Secretary of State, dated 14th May, 1862 accompanying the first Letters Patent of the Calcuatta High Court.[1-a] But the limitation has now been removed by the enactment of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869 which does not require that both parties should profess the Christian relegion. The High Court has therefore, jurisdiction to entertain a suit for restitution of conjugal rights instituted by a Christian woman against her husband who is a Parsee.[2]

2. Both parties other than Christians.—It was held by the Privy Council in the undermentioned case[1] that the Supreme Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit, on its ecclesiastical side, by a parsee wife against a Parsee husband for the restitution of conjugal rights. Their Lordships of the Privy Council also observed as follows:—

"But we should much regret if there were no Court and no law whereby a remedy could be administered to the evils which must be incidental to married life against them." Clause 12, ante was intended to remove this difficulty and by virtue of that clause the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit arising out of matrimonial disputes between persons other than Christians, for instance, between Jews.[2]

3. Respondent not within the Presidency.—The High Court has no jurisdiction to grant relief by way of restitution of conjugal rights against a respondent who is absent from the presidency at the time the suit is instituted and remains absent subsequently also.[1]

4. Matters matrimonial.—The jurisdiction of the High Court in matters matrimonial is only such jurisdiction as is comprised within the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869; therefore, a suit for a declaration that a marriage was a valid and lawful marriage does not lie.[1]

Powers of Single Judges and Division Courts.

Single Judges and Division Courts.

36. And We do hereby declare that any function which is hereby directed to be performed by the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay,] Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction, may be performed by any Judge, or by any Division Court thereof, appointed or constituted for such purpose, in pursuance of section 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915; and if such Division Court is composed of two or more Judges and the Judges are divided in opinion as to the decision to be given on any point, such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of the Judges if there shall be a majority, but if the Judges should be equally divided, they shall state the point upon which they differ and the case shall then be heard upon that point by one or more of the other Judges and the point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of the Judges who have heard the case including those who first heard it.

Synopsis.

1. Amendment of the Clause.
2. "May be performed by any Judge or by any Division Bench thereof."
3. When the Judges are equally divided.
4. Reference.

1. Amendment of the clause.—

(1) The words "in pursuance of S. 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915" were substituted for the words "under the provisions of the 13th section of the aforesaid Act of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth years of our reign" by the amended Letters Patent of 11th March 1919.

(2) By the amendment of the Letters Patent in 1928 the words following the words "equally divided" till the end of the clause were substituted for the words "the opinion of the Senior Judge shall prevail." As to the effect of this amendment, see Note 12 to S. 98, Civil Procedure Code.

2. "May be performed by any Judge or by any Division Bench thereof".—Where the Court takes action in contempt proceedings, the rule need not be issued by the Court as an entire body. A single Judge or Division Bench has jurisdiction to issue the rule.[1]

The fact that a matter coming before second appellate Court constituted by a single Judge in High Court, is one of difficulty does not necessitate its being referred to a Bench of two Judges.[2]

3. When the Judges are equally divided.—The amendment of this clause made in 1928 mentioned in Note 1, ante applies to all cases pending on the date of such amendment.[1]

As to the effect of S. 98, C. P. Code upon this clause and the procedure in such cases, see Note 12 to that section and also the undermentioned cases.[2]

Before the amendment of 1928 it was held in the following cases that the opinion of the Senior Judge prevailed on a difference of opinion between the Judges of the Division Bench.[3]

4. Reference.—In order that a reference may be made under this clause it is not necessary that there must be a difference on a particular point. It may be made even when there is a difference as to the result of the appeal heard by the High Court.[1]

A single Judge of the High Court is competent to hear a reference under this clause.[2] diction respectively: Provided always that the said High Court shall be guided in making such rules and orders as far as possible by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, being an Act passed by the Governor-General in Council, and being Act No. VIII of 1859, and the provisions of any law which has been made, amending or altering the same, by competent legislative authority for India.

Power to delegate. See Note 1, Pt. (2).

1. Rules and Orders.—This clause gives the High Court the power to make rules and orders for the purpose of regulating all proceedings in civil cases which may be brought before the said High Court.[1] But it does not authorise the High Court to frame a rule delegating a judicial function to one of its officers. Thus R. 515-A of the rules and orders of the Calcutta High Court delegating to the registrar the function of granting leave under Cl. 12, ante, is ultra vires.[2]

Where a rule of the Civil Procedure Code is inconsistent with the rules of the High Court made in pursuance of the power conferred by this clause the latter must prevail.[3]

16. Appeal from order granting certificate.

Order under Specific Relief Act whether appealable. See Note 12, F.-N. (2).

1. Scope of the clause.—The right of appeal to the Privy Council rests upon this clause and is elaborated in Ss. 109 to 112 of the Civil Procedure Code.[1] This clause deals with two categories of cases; (a) judgment, decrees or orders made on appeal and, (b) judgments, decrees or orders made in the exercise of original jurisdiction, whether by individual Judges or by division Courts.[2]

There was a conflict of opinion as to whether a party desirous of appealing against a judgment was bound to appeal under Clause 15, ante before appealing to Privy Council, where the Judges hearing an appeal were equally divided in opinion.[3] In view of the amendment of Clause 36 of the Letters Patent made in 1928 this difficulty cannot now occur.

2. "In any matter not being of Criminal Jurisdiction."—The words "in any matter not being of Criminal jurisdiction" govern both the classes of judgments, decrees or orders which are mentioned in this clause.[1] Thus the High Court has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to Privy Council against a judgment of High Court sitting in Criminal appeal from the judgment of a Court of Sessions.[2] Such leave cannot be granted even

3. Judgment, decree or order made on appeal.—Where a decree is passed by the High Court on appeal from another tribunal, in order that the decree of the High Court may be appealable to the Privy Council, the said tribunal must be a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court within the meaning of Clause 16, ante.[1]

12. Decision under the Income-tax Act.—It was held by the Privy Council in the undermentioned case[1] that a judgment of the High Court passed on a reference under S. 51 of the Income-tax Act of 1918 was only advisory and, therefore, not appealable to the Privy Council. But it is now provided by S. 66-A of the Act amended by the Act XXIV of 1926 that an appeal to the Privy Council will lie in such a case.

Section 66-A of the Income-tax Act does not, however, provide for an appeal from an order of the High Court under S. 66, sub-S. (3) refusing to require the Commissioner to state a case. The High Court of Lahore has held that such an order is final judgment passed in the exercise of original jurisdiction and is, therefore, appealable.[2] But the High Court of Rangoon has held that it has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal in such a case.[3]

13. Order made in the exercise of disciplinary jurisdiction under Clause 10, ante.—See S. 109, Note 2, points (5) and (6) and also the undermentioned case.[1]

14. Order refusing to quash proceedings by writ of Certiorari.—No appeal lies to Privy Council under this clause against an order of a Division Bench of the High Court refusing to quash, by writ of certiorari, the proceedings of Deputy Collector who, as an Income-tax officer, directed the prosecution of a person under S. 193, Indian Penal Code.[1] The reason is that the order is neither one passed on appeal nor one passed in the exercise of original jurisdiction.

15. Judgment, decree or order must be final.—See Note 4 to S. 109 and the undermentioned cases.[1]

16. Appeal from order granting certificate.—An order of a Judge of a High Court granting a certificate that a case is a fit and proper one for appeal to the Privy Council is not a "judgment" within the meaning of Clause 15, ante and is, therefore, not appealable under that clause.[1]

Cl. 40, Note 1.

Appeal from interlocutory judgment.

40. And We do further ordain that it shall be lawful for the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal at its discretion, on the motion, or if the said High Court be not sitting, then for any Judge of the said High Court, upon the petition of any party who considers himself aggrieved by any preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree, order or sentence of the said High Court in any such proceeding as aforesaid, not being of criminal jurisdiction, to grant permission to such party to appeal against the same to Us, Our heirs and successors, in Our or Their Privy Council, subject to the same rules, regulations and limitation as are herein expressed respecting appeals from final judgments, decrees, orders and sentences.

Order refusing the appointment of a receiver in a suit. See Note 1, Pt. (6).

1. Appeal from interlocutory judgment.—There is no appeal to the Privy Council, as of right, in interlocutory matters and; but for the provisions of this clause an appeal in such a matter would be incompetent.[1] This clause only contemplates orders which have been made on appeal by the High Court under Clause 15, ante, and such orders as are, by reason of the number of Judges who have taken part in the decision, not appealable to the High Court.[2]

The granting of the permission to appeal under this clause is entirely discretionary with the Court or Judge empowered to give it.[3] "As a general rule and in the absence of special circumstances or some unusual occasion for its exercise, the power of making interlocutory orders is one which is not a suitable subject for review".[4] Thus no leave to appeal to the Privy Council will be granted under this clause against an order relating to a question of practice such as an order for inspection of documents[5] or against an order refusing an appointment of a receiver.[6] But where the order complained of involves a matter of real importance, such as a question of jurisdiction to make a particular order, leave to appeal will be granted.[7]

Note 1.

Appeal in criminal cases, etc.

41. And We do further ordain that from any judgment, order or sentence of the said High Court of Judicature at [Madras,] [Bombay], Fort William in Bengal made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction, or in any criminal case where any point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in manner hereinbefore provided, by any court which has exercised original jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the person aggrieved by such judgment, order or sentence to appeal to Us, Our heirs or successors, in Council, provided the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for such appeal, and under such conditions as the said High Court may establish or require, subject always to such rules and orders as We may, with the advice of Our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf.

1. Appeal in criminal cases.—In a criminal case the Court's power to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council is only under this Clause. Thus the High Court has no power to grant leave to appeal from a judgment passed by it in a criminal appeal[1] or against an order made by it under S. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code.[2]

And that the said High Court shall also certify and transmit to Us, Our heirs and successors, in Our or Their Privy Council, a copy of the reasons given by the Judges of such Court, or by any of such Judges, for or against the judgment or determination appealed against. And We do further ordain that the said High Court shall, in all cases of appeal to Us, Ours heirs or successors, conform to and execute, or cause to be executed, such judgments and orders as We Our heirs or successors, in Our or Their Privy Council, shall think fit to make in the premises in such manner as any original judgment, decree or decretal orders, or other order or rule of the said High Court, should or might have been executed.

1. Transmission of records.—This Clause expressly requires that the reasons for the decisions of the High Court should be recorded by the Judges and transmitted to the Privy Council for its information.[1] Where an appeal to the Privy Council against a decree has been admitted such proceedings as applications for review of the judgment and the order of the Court thereon ought not to form part of the records to be transmitted to England.[2] exercise of the power conferred by this Clause. But the Letters Patent cannot be varied by mere resolutions either of the local Government or of the Government of India.[2]

Section 9 of the High Courts Act (now S. 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915) gives power to Her Majesty to direct by Her Letters Patent that they may be subject to the powers of the Indian Legislature and, therefore, this Clause is not ultra vires of the powers of Her Majesty.[3]

3. Legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council.—Section 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 (24 & 25, Vict., C. 67) gives power to the Governor-General in Council to make laws or regulations for repealing, amending, or altering any laws or regulations then in force, or thereafter to be in force in the Indian territories. It is also provided by that section that the Governor-General in Council has no power to make any laws or regulations which shall repeal or in any way affect any of the provisions of the Act or of any provisions of certain other Acts named therein or of any Act passed in that session of Parliament. Thus the Governor-General in Council has no power to make any alteration in regard to the qualification of Judges prescribed in S. 2 or in regard to powers of the superintendence of the High Court given by S. 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915.[1] Similarly, Governor-General in Council has no power to legislate so as to deprive a British Subject of his right of suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council in such cases as are allowed by S. 65 of the Government of India Act, 1858, which Act is mentioned in the proviso to S. 22 of the Indian Councils Act.[2]

[The first two paragraphs of the Preamble are similar to those in Calcutta Letters Patent of 1865.]

And whereas it is further declared by the said recited Act that it shall be lawful for Us by Letters Patent, to erect, and establish a High Court of Judicature in and for any portion of the territories, within Her Majesty's dominions in India, not included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of

LETTERS PATENT CONSTITUTING THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT PATNA.

Dated the 9th February, 1916.

Recital of Act 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104.

GEORGE THE FIFTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India. To all to whom, these Presents shall come, greeting: Whereas by an Act of Parliament passed in the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Years of the Reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and called the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, it was, amongst other things, enacted, by section one, that it should be lawful for Her Majesty, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to erect and establish a High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William; and, by section two, that such High Court should consist of a Chief Justice and as many Judges, not exceeding fifteen, as Her Majesty might, from time to time, think fit to appoint, who should be selected from among persons qualified as in the said Act was declared; and, by section eight, that upon the establishment of such High Court as aforesaid the Supreme Court and the Court of Sadar Diwani Adalat and Sadar Nizamat Adalat at Calcutta, in the said Presidency, should be abolished; and, by section nine, that the High Court of Judicature so to be established should have and exercise all such civil, criminal, admiralty and vice-admiralty, testamentary, intestate and matrimonial jurisdiction, original and appellate, and all such powers and authority for and in relation to the administration of justice in the said Presidency, as Her Majesty might by such Letters Patent as aforesaid grant and direct, subject, however, to such directions and limitations, as to the exercise of original, civil and criminal jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Presidency-town, as might be prescribed thereby; and that, save as by such Letters Patent might be otherwise directed, and subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court so to be established should have and exercise all jurisdiction, and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under the said Act at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts:

And whereas it was further declared by section sixteen of the said recited Act that it should be lawful for Us by Letters Patent to erect and establish a High Court of Judicature in and for any portion of territories within Our Dominions in India, not included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of another High Court, to consist of a Chief Justice and such number of other Judges, with such qualifications as were by the same Act required in persons to be appointed to the High Courts established at the Presidencies of Fort William in Bengal, of Madras, and of Bombay, as We from time to time might think fit and appoint; and that it should be lawful for Us, by such Letters Patent, to confer on any new High Court which might be so established any such jurisdiction, powers and authority as under the same Act was authorized to be conferred on or would become vested in the High Court established in any of the said Presidencies; and that subject to the directions of the Letters Patent, all the provisions of the said recited Act relative to High Courts and to the Chief Justice and other Judges of such Courts, and to the Governor-General or Governor of the Presidency in which such High Courts were established in any of the said Presidencies; and that subject to the directions of the High Court which might be established in the said territories, and to the Chief Justice and other Judges thereof, and to the Persons administering the Government of the said territories:

Recital of establishment of High Courts at Fort William and Allahabad.

And whereas, upon full consideration of the premises, Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing date at Westminster the Fourteenth day of May, in the Twenty-fifth Year of Her Reign, in the Year of Our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, did erect and establish a High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal for the Bengal Division of the Presidency, of Fort William aforesaid, and did constitute that Court to be a Court of Record:

And whereas Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing date at Westminster the Twenty-eigth day of December, in the Twenty-ninth Year of Her Reign, in the Year of Our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, did revoke the said Letters Patent bearing date the Fourteenth day of May in the Year of Our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, but notwithstanding that revocation did continue the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal and declared that the Court should continue to be a Court of Record:

And whereas, upon full consideration of the premises, Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing date at Westminster the Seventeenth day of March, in the Twenty-ninth Year of Her Reign, in the Year of Our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, did erect and establish a High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, which said Court is situated at Allahabad in the Province of Agra and is now called the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, and did constitute that Court to be a Court of Record:

Recital of Act 1 & 2, Geo. 5, c. 18.

And whereas by an Act of Parliament passed in the First and Second Years of Our Reign, and called the Indian High Courts Act, 1911, it was enacted, amongst other things, by section one, that the maximum number of Judges of a High Court of Judicature in India including the Chief Justice, should be twenty;

and, by section two, that Our power under section sixteen of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, might be exercised from time to time and that a High Court might be established under the said section sixteen in any portion of the territories within Our Dominions in India, whether or not included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of another High Court; and that, where such a High Court was established in any part of such territories included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of another High Court, it should be lawful for us, by Letters Patent to alter the local jurisdiction of that other High Court and to make such incidental consequential and supplemental provisions as might appear to be necessary by reason of the alterations of those limits:

Recital of Act 5 & 6, Geo. 5, c. 61.

And whereas the said Indian High Courts Acts, 1861 and 1911, have been repealed and re-enacted by an Act of Parliament passed in the Fifth and Sixty Years of Our Reign, and called the Government of India Act, 1915:

Recital of creation of Province of Bihar and Orissa.

And whereas certain territories formerly subject to and included within the limits of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal were, by proclamation made by the Governor-General of India on the Twenty-second day of March in the Year of Our Lord One thousand nine hundred and twelve, constituted a separate Province, called the Province of Bihar and Orissa, and are now governed by Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

L. P. Lah. King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India. To all to whom these Presents shall come, greeting: Whereas by an Act of Parliament passed in the Fifth and Sixth years of Our Reign and called the Government of India Act, 1915, it was amongst other things enacted that it should be lawful for Us by Letters Patent to establish a High Court of Judicature in any territory in British India whether or not included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of another High Court and to confer on any High Court so established any such jurisdiction, powers and authority as were vested in or might be conferred on any High Court existing at the commencement of that Act; and

WHEREAS the Provinces of the Punjab and Delhi are now subject to the jurisdiction of the Chief Court of the Punjab which was established by an Act of the Governor-General of India in Council, being Act No. XXIII of 1865, and was continued by later enactments and no part of the said Provinces is included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of any High Court.

George the Fifth, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India:

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas in the Government of India Act, it was amongst other things enacted that it should be lawful for Us by Letters Patent to establish a High Court of Judicature in any territory in British India whether or not included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of another High Court and to confer on any High Court so established any such jurisdiction, powers and authority as were vested in or might be conferred on any High Court existing at the commencement of that Act:

And whereas no part of the said Province is included within the limits of the local jurisdiction of any High Court.

Establishment of High Court at Rangoon.

1 Now know ye that We, upon full consideration of the premises, and of Our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have thought fit to erect and establish, and by these presents We do accordingly for Us, Our heirs and successors, erect and establish, for those portions of the province of Burma, at present within the limits of the jurisdiction of the said Chief Court of Lower Burma and of the said Judicial Commissioner and of the said Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma, as aforesaid, with effect from the date of the publication of these presents in the Gazette of India, a High Court of Judicature, which shall be called the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, and We do hereby constitute the said Court to be a Court of Record.

Cl. 2.

2. And We do hereby appoint and ordain that the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon shall, until further or other provision be made by Us, or Our heirs and successors, in that behalf in accordance with section one hundred and one of the Government of India Act, ordinarily consist of a Chief Justice and not less than seven other Judges, the first Chief Justice being Sir Sydney Maddock Robinson, Kt., and the other Judges being Leslie Harry Saunders, Esq., C.S.I, Maung. 10. And We do further ordain that the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try and determine suits of every description if, in the case of suits for land or other immovable property, such land or property shall be situated, or in all other cases if the cause of action shall have arisen, either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the said High Court, or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell, or carry on business, or personally work for gain within such limits; except that the said High Court shall not have such original jurisdiction in cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Rangoon Small Cause Court.

Cl. 14.

Appeal from other Civil Courts.

14. And We do further ordain that the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon shall be a Court of Appeal from the Civil Courts of the Province of Burma for which, immediately before the publication of these presents, the Chief Court of Lower Burma or the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma was a Court of Appeal, and from all other Civil Courts, whether within or without the Province of Burma, for which the said High Court is declared to be a Court of Appeal by any law made by the local legislature or by competent legislative authority for India, and shall exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as were, immediately before the date of the publication of these presents, subject to appeal to the Chief Court of Lower Burma or to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma by virtue of any law then in force, or as may after that date be declared subject to appeal to the said High Court by any law made by the local legislature or by competent legislative authority for India.

16. And We do further ordain that the Court for relief of insolvent debtors at Rangoon shall be held before one of the Judges of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon and the said High Court, and any such Judge thereof, shall have and exercise within the Province of Burma, such powers and authorities with respect to original and appellate jurisdiction and otherwise as are constituted by the laws relating to insolvent debtors in the Province of Burma.

Cl. 17, Note 1.

17. And We do further ordain that, with respect to the law to be applied to each case coming before the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, such law shall be the law which would have been applied by the Chief Court of Lower Burma to such case if these Letters Patent had not issued.

1. Law, meaning of.—The word "law" as used in this Clause merely means the legal enactments of the Indian and Burmese legislatures and the English common law and equity which was applied by the late Chief Court of Burma. It does not include the published decisions of that Court and, therefore, the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction is not bound by the authorised reports of decisions of the Chief Court of Lower Burma.[1]

See also the undermentioned case.[2]

Equity to be administered by the High Court in the exercise of ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

18. And We do further ordain that, with respect to the equity to be applied to each case coming before the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, such equity shall be the equity as nearly as may be which the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is authorised to apply to such case.

25. And We do further ordain that on such point or points of law being so reserved as aforesaid, or on its being certified by the Government Advocate that in his judgment, there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the Court of original criminal jurisdiction, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said Court, should be further considered, the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon shall have full power and authority to review the case, or such part of it, as may be necessary, and

26. And We do further ordain that the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon shall be a Court of Appeal from the Criminal Courts for which immediately before the publication of these presents the Chief Court of Lower Burma or the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma was a Court of Appeal and from all other Criminal Courts, whether within or without the Province of Burma, for which the said High Court is declared to be a Court of Appeal by any law made by the local legislature or by competent legislative authority for India, and shall exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as were, immediately before the date of the publication of these presents, subject to appeal to the Chief Court of Lower Burma or to the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma by virtue of any law then in force, or as may after that date be declared subject to appeal to the said High Court by any law made by the local legislature or by competent legislative authority for India.

1. Power of transfer.—This Clause does not confer any power of transfer over and above that conferred by S. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.[1] The reason is that this Clause is qualified by Cl. 36, infra.

1. Power to make rules.—This Clause enables the High Court to make rules and orders for the purpose of regulating proceedings in civil cases. It does not enable the High Court to frame rules repugnant to the terms of the Letters Patent. Thus, R. 28 of the Appellate Side Rules of the High Court of Rangoon is ultra vires in so far as it contemplates that a Judge other than the Judge, who passed a judgment, may declare that a case is a fit one for appeal under Cl. 13, ante.[1]

The Respondent shall be entitled to be heard before the Judicial Committee in the matter of the said Summons and to ask for his costs and such other relief as he may be advised. The Judicial Committee may, after considering the matter of the said Summons, recommend to His Majesty to rescind the grant of special leave to appeal or give such other directions therein as the justice of the case may require.

R. 12. Printing of record.

12. The Record shall be printed in accordance with the Rules contained in Schedule A hereto. It may be printed either abroad or in England. When printed abroad the parties in England shall, upon perusal, consider whether the order of the documents is in accordance with these Rules and if it is not, they shall agree upon the proper order. The Appellant shall then rearrange copies of the Record for the use of the Judicial Committee and the other parties. In the event of the parties being unable to agree the matter shall be referred to the Registrar of the Privy Council who, if he thinks fit, may require the parties to attend before the Judicial Committee for directions.

R. 18. Documents objected to be indicated.

18. Where in the course of the preparation of a Record one party objects to the inclusion of a document on the ground that it is unnecessary or irrelevant, and the other party nevertheless insists upon its being included, the record as finally printed (whether abroad or in England), shall, with a view to the subsequent adjustment of the costs of and incidental to such document, indicate in the index of papers, or otherwise, the fact that, and the party, by whom the inclusion of the document was objected to. P. C. R. 18.

Times within which a copy of a written Record shall be bespoken.

22. Where the Record arrives in England either wholly written, or partly written and partly printed, the Appellant shall, within a period of four months from the date of such arrival in the case of Appeals from Courts situate in any of the countries or places named in Schedule B hereto, and within a period of two months from the same date in the case of Appeals from any other Court, enter an Appearance and bespeak a typewritten copy of the Record, or of such parts thereof as it may be necessary to have copied, and shall engage to pay the cost of preparing such copy at the following rates per folio typed (exclusive of tabular matter) 2*d.* per folio of English matter, 2½*d.* per folio of Indian matter, and 3½*d.* per folio of foreign matter; and shall also engage to pay at such price as shall be fixed by the Registrar of the Privy Council the cost of printing at least 50 copies thereof. R. 22.

Preparation of copy of Record for printer.

23. As soon as the Appellant has obtained the typewritten copy of the Record bespoken by him, he shall proceed with due diligence, to arrange the documents in suitable order, to check the index, to insert marginal notes and check the same with the index, and, generally, to do whatever may be required for the purpose of preparing the copy for the printer, in accordance with the Rules contained in Schedule A hereto, and shall, if the Respondent has entered an Appearance, submit the copy as prepared for the printer, to the Respondent for his approval. In the event of the parties being unable to agree, the matter shall be referred to the Registrar of the Privy Council who, if he thinks fit, may require the parties to attend before the Judicial Committee for directions. R. 23.

Lodging copy of Record for printing.

24. R. 24.

25. Whenever it shall be found that the decision of a matter on appeal is likely to turn exclusively on a question of law, the parties with the sanction of the Registrar of the Privy Council, may submit such question of law to the Judicial Committee in the form of a Special Case and print such parts only of the Record as may be necessary for the discussion of the same Provided that nothing herein contained shall in any way prevent the Judicial Committee from ordering the full discussion of the whole case, if they shall so think fit, and that, in order to promote such arrangements and simplification of the matter in dispute, the said Registrar may call the parties before him, and having heard them, and examined the Record, may report to the Judicial Committee as to the nature of the proceedings. 58. Where a Petitioner unduly delays bringing a Petition to a hearing, the Registrar of the Privy Council shall call upon him to explain the delay, and if no explanation is offered, or if the explanation offered is, in the opinion of the said Registrar, insufficient, the said Registrar may, after notifying all parties interested by Summons of his intention to do so, put the Petition in the paper for hearing on the next following day appointed by the Judicial Committee for the hearing of Petitions for such directions as the Committee may think fit to give thereon. R. 58.

R. 60.

Printing of case.

61. The case may be printed either abroad or in England, and shall in either event, be printed in accordance with the Rules I to III contained in Schedule A hereto, every tenth line thereof being numbered in the margin, and shall be signed by at least one of the counsel who attends at the hearing of the appeal or by the party himself if he conducts his appeal in person. 62. Each party shall lodge 30 prints of his case. R. 62.

Form of case.

63. The case shall consist of paragraphs numbered consecutively and shall state, as concisely as possible, the circumstances out of which the appeal arises, the contentions to be urged by the party lodging the same, and the reasons of appeal. References by page and line to the relevant portions of the record as printed shall, as far as practicable, be printed in the margin, and care shall be taken to avoid, as far as possible, the reprinting in the case of long extracts from the record. The Taxing Officer, in taxing the costs of the appeal, shall, either of his own motion, or at the instance of the opposite party, inquire into any unnecessary prolixity in the case, and shall disallow the costs occasioned thereby. R. 63.

Separate cases by two or more respondents.

64. Two or more respondents may, at their own risk as to costs, lodge separate cases in the same appeal. R 64.

Notice of lodgment of case.

Subject as hereinafter provided, the party who lodges his case first may, at any time after the expiration of three clear days from the day on which he has given the other party the notice prescribed by the last preceding Rule, serve such other party, if the latter, has not, in the meantime lodged his case, with a "case notice", requiring him to lodge his case within one month from the date of the service of the said case notice and informing him that, in default of his so doing, the appeal will be set down for hearing ex parte as against him, and if the other party fails to comply with the said case notice, the party who has lodged his case may, at any time after the expiration of the time limited by the said case notice for the lodging of the case, lodge an affidavit of service (which) shall set out the terms of the said case (notice), and the appeal shall thereupon, if all other conditions of its being set down are satisfied, be set down ex parte as against the party in default provided that no case notice shall be served until after the completion of the printing, or R. 66.

P. C. R. 66. re-arrangement under R. 12, of the Record, and also that nothing in this Rule contained shall preclude the party in default from lodging his case, at his own risk as regards costs and otherwise, at any time up to the date of hearing.

R. 67. Setting down Appeal and exchanging cases.

67. Subject to the provisions of R. 43 and of the last preceding rule, an appeal shall be set down ipso facto as soon as the cases on both sides are lodged, and the parties shall thereupon exchange cases by handing one another, either at the offices of one of the Agents or in the Registry of the Privy Council, ten copies of their respective cases.

BINDING RECORDS, ETC.

R. 68. Mode of binding records, etc., for use of Judicial Committee.

68. As soon as an appeal is set down, the appellant shall attend at the Registry of the Privy Council and obtain ten copies of the record and cases to be bound for the use of the Judicial Committee at the hearing. The copies shall be bound in cloth or in half leather with paper sides, and six leaves of blank paper shall be inserted before the appellant's case. The front cover shall bear a printed label stating the title and Privy Council number of the appeal, the contents of the volume, and the names and addresses of the London Agents. The several documents, indicated by incuts, shall be arranged in the following order: (1) Appellant's case; (2) Respondent's case; (3) Record (if in more than one part, showing the separate parts by incuts, all parts being paged at the top of the page); (4) Supplemental record (if any); and the short title and Privy Council number of the appeal shall also be shown on the back.

R. 69. Time within which bound copies shall be lodged.

69. The Appellant shall lodge the bound copies not less than four clear days before the commencement of the Sittings during which the appeal is to be heard.

HEARING.

R. 70. Notice of day on or before which appeals must be set down for ensuing sittings.

70. The Registrar of the Privy Council shall name a day on or before which Appeals must be set down if they are to be entered in the list of business for the ensuing sittings. All appeals set down on or before the day named shall, subject to any directions from the committee or to any agreement between the parties to the contrary, be entered in such list of business and shall, subject to any directions from the committee to the contrary, be heard in the order in which they are set down.

R. 71. Notice to parties of day fixed for hearing appeal.

71. The Registrar of the Privy Council shall, subject to the provisions of R. 42, notify the parties to each appeal by Summons, at the earliest possible date, of the day appointed by the Judicial Committee for the hearing of the appeal, and the parties shall be in readiness to be heard on the day so appointed.

JUDGMENT.

R. 74. Notice to parties of day fixed for delivery of judgment.

COSTS.

R. 75. Taxation of costs.

75. All Bills of costs under the orders of the Judicial Committee on appeals, Petitions, and other matters, shall be referred to the Registrar of the Privy Council, or such other person as the Judicial Committee may appoint, for taxation, and all such taxation shall be regulated by the Schedule of Fees set forth in Schedule C hereto.

Order to tax.

77. The Registrar of the Privy Council shall, with all convenient speed after the Judicial Committee have given their decision as to the costs of an appeal, Petition, or other matter, issue to the party to whom costs have been awarded an order to tax and a notice specifying the day and hour appointed by him for taxation. The party receiving such order to tax and notice shall, not less than 48 hours before the time appointed for taxation, lodge his bill of costs (together with all necessary vouchers for disbursements), and serve the opposite party with a copy of his bill of costs and of the order to tax and notice. R. 77.

Power of Taxing Officer where taxation delayed through the fault of the party whose costs are to be taxed.

78. The Taxing Officer may, if he think fit, disallow to any party who fails to lodge his bill of costs (together with all necessary vouchers for disbursements) within the time prescribed by the last preceding rule, or who in any way delays or impedes a taxation, the charges to which such party would otherwise be entitled for drawing his bill of costs and attending the taxation. R. 78.

Appeal from decision of Taxing Officer.

79. Any party aggrieved by a taxation may appeal from the decision of the Taxing Officer to the Judicial Committee. The appeal shall be heard by way of motion, and the party appealing shall give three clear days' notice of motion to the opposite party, and shall also leave a copy of such notice in the Registry of the Privy Council. R. 79.

Amount of taxed costs to be inserted in His Majesty's Order in Council.

Taxation on the pauper scale.

81. Where the Judicial Committee directs costs to be taxed on the pauper scale, the Taxing Officer shall not allow any fees of counsel, and shall only award to the agents out of pocket expenses and a reasonable allowance to cover office expenses, such allowance to be taken at about three-eighths of the usual professional charges in ordinary appeals. Such pauper scale shall apply to and include the application upon which leave to appeal in forma pauperis was granted. R. 81.

Security to be dealt with as His Majesty's order in council determining appeal directs.

82. Where the Appellant has lodged security for the Respondent's costs of an appeal in the Registry of the Privy Council, the Registrar of the Privy Council shall deal with such security in accordance with the directions contained in His Majesty's order in council determining the appeal. R. 82.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Power of Judicial Committee to excuse from compliance with rules.

83. The Judicial Committee may, for sufficient cause shown, excuse the parties from compliance with any of the requirements of these rules, and may give such directions in matters of practice and procedure as they shall consider just and expedient. Applications to be excused from compliance with the requirements of any of these rules shall be addressed in the first instance to the Registrar of the Privy Council, who shall take the instructions of the committee thereon and communicate the same to the parties. If, in the opinion of the said Registrar, it is desirable that the application should be dealt with by the Committee in open Court, he may direct the party applying to lodge in the Registry of the Privy Council, and to serve the opposite party with, a notice of motion returnable before the committee. R. 83.

Amendment of documents.

84. Any document lodged in connection with an appeal, petition, or other matter pending before His Majesty in Council or the Judicial Committee, may be amended by leave of the Registrar of the Privy Council, but if the said Registrar is of opinion that an Application for leave to amend should be dealt with by the R. 84.

Until such notices are given the former agent shall be considered the agent of the party until the final conclusion of the appeal, petition, or other matter.

APPENDIX V

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The Bill is sufficiently explained in the Report of the Special Committee printed below.

H. ERLE RICHARDS.

Simla, 3rd September, 1907.

Report of the Special Committee appointed to consider the amendment of the Civil Procedure Code.

We have the honour to present this report on the proposals to amend the Code of C. P. which have been submitted for our consideration by the Government of India and, annexed to it, a draft Bill amended by us. A detailed account of the alterations introduced in the Bill will be found in the Notes on clauses which form the second part of this Report, but we desire by way of preface to make some observations of a general character on the defects in the existing law which appear to us to call for reform and on the more important of those alterations.

1. The Code of C. P. of 1882 has been in force for 25 years and the experience of those years has shown that the general lines on which it proceeds are sound. The matters in which it has proved defective are for the most part matters of detail, and they arise, as it seems to us, mainly from the fact that it is impossible to frame a fixed and right Code in such a manner as to sufficiently meet the varying needs of an area so diversified as that to which the Code applies. In our opinion it is essential that there should be some machinery to enable variations to be introduced in procedure to meet the different requirements of different localities as well as to enable defects to be remedied as they are discovered without resort to the tardy process of legislation. We propose to make provision for these purposes by a re-arrangement of the Code. We recommend that matters of mere machinery should be relegated to rules capable of alteration by each High Court, subject to certain checks, and that those provisions only should be retained in the body of the Code in which some degree of permanence and uniformity is desirable. This re-arrangement is in accordance with precedent and possesses advantages so obvious that it is needless to enlarge upon them.

2. The objection—and as it appears to us the only objection of substance—that can be urged against this proposal is that until the scheme of distribution had become familiar to those who have to administer the Act the change may cause some confusion and the familiar numerical references to the present sections will no longer apply. We are sensible that some inconvenience must arise from this cause in the first instance, but this is but a small disadvantage in comparison with the advantages to be obtained by the change, and we cannot think that any one will seriously contend that such a slight and temporary drawback should stand in the way of a reform which appears to us in other respects to be wholly beneficial.

3. The adoption of this principle has necessarily involved a departure from the arrangement of the present Code, but in other respects we have advisedly adhered as closely as possible to the existing language, the meaning of which is now well understood by Courts and by practitioners. Speaking generally, it may be said that we have only departed from the phraseology of the Code where experience has suggested improvements or competent authority has called for some change. We have refrained from altering the wording merely because it might be capable of improvement; for in any change, even of a verbal character, there is a risk of opening a door to fresh litigation. In the amendments that we have introduced we have endeavoured to state general rules of procedure rather than to provide in detail for every possible contingency; for we hold it to be a sound view that excessive elaboration of details of procedure tends to cramp the actions of the Court and in consequence to encourage technicalities. For this reason we have made no attempt to embody in the Code a digest of the very numerous decisions on the existing sections: we have made amendments to meet case-law only on points on which there is a conflict of authority. And in this connection we desire to point out that at the present time there is even less justification for the enactment of elaborate provisions in regard to procedure than at the time when the Code of 1882 was passed. Since then the standard of legal efficiency in the mofussil has been materially raised, and the principles of procedure are now so well understood that the Courts may be trusted to apply them intelligently in cases for which no provision may be made in terms.

But although we have made the present Code the basis of our draft we have carefully examined the Bill settled by the Select Committee in 1903, and we desire to express our acknowledgments to that Committee for the store of information it contains, and for the materials collected in their Report.

Apart from the re-arrangement to which reference has been made we have not introduced many changes of a radical character in the Code.

4. The general nature of some of the amendments we recommend may be conveniently illustrated by a brief examination of the extent to which the various stages of a suit will be affected by them.

A. To begin with it is hoped that the multiplicity of suits will be further curtailed by the new provisions we have inserted to remove limitations which we regard as needless on the comprehensiveness of a suit, and by the wider powers of amendment vested in the Courts under the Bill. An adequate check is provided by the power of a Court to interfere where embarrassment is likely to result.

B. Increased facilities have been given for the service of process to which further reference is made in the Notes on Clauses. It is hoped that in the gradual introduction of service by post may be found a solution of one of the principal defects in our legal system.

C. In our opinion it is most necessary that litigants in this country should come to trial with all issues clearly defined, and that cases should not be expanded or grounds shifted without reference to the true facts. For this purpose we think that the present system of pleadings in the mofussil, which is notoriously lax, should be improved, and we have incorporated in the rules an Order on pleadings, which it is hoped will lead to sounder and fairer methods of arriving at the real points in dispute. The forms have been revised and we hope that they will be brought into more general use in the mofussil.

We have not been able within the time at our disposal to make these forms, or the other forms in the Appendix to Schedule I, complete: but this is a matter of detail which can be further considered before the Bill is passed into law.

D. It is not possible to secure expedition in the disposal of suits, unless the questions of fact on which there is a real contest are narrowed down as far as possible. As a step towards this, we have incorporated in the rules an Order in which provision is made for the admission not only of documents, but also of facts. It must be left to litigants and their advisers to make adequate use of this order: but it is hoped that the Courts will encourage the use of it, since it certainly affords a means whereby the two principal evils of litigation, delay, and expense, can be materially diminished.

E. We attach much importance to a proper use being made by Courts in the mofussil of the procedure prescribed for the first hearing. The Code as it stands makes provision for the examination of parties by the Court, and we have altered the language so as to compel the production of documents at the first hearing. In our opinion this will act as a substantial check on the fabrication of documentary evidence.

F. The provisions relating to the hearing of suits do not call for material alteration, but we have thought it well to provide expressly for the cases where a party dies between conclusion of the hearing and delivery of judgment. It would obviously be wrong that such an accident should in any way interfere with the disposal of the case, and we have therefore inserted a provision to enable judgment to be pronounced notwithstanding the death.

G. A change of importance has been made in regard to decrees. In the first place, we have inserted an express provision recognizing the distinction between preliminary and final decrees. We hope in this way to afford facilities for checking the delay that now results from the objectionable practice of leaving for determination in execution questions which should be decided by the decree. This change should ensure the more expeditious disposal of a class of suits which at present are conspicuous for the delay to which they give rise. Another amendment of importance which we have introduced is in regard to mortgage-suits. These are very numerous and involve complicated questions of law. Hitherto some confusion has been occasioned by the co-existence of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Code in regard to execution in mortgage-suits. We think that the provisions regulating this matter should be dealt with in their entirety in the Code, and we have therefore introduced rules in Order XXXIV to give effect to our view. We propose that the sections of the Transfer of Property Act affected by this change should be repealed. We desire to call the attention of those Provinces to which that Act does not apply to the effect of these changes.

In our opinion it is expedient to give greater assistance to the Courts in the framing of decrees. The importance of this branch of procedure cannot be overrated; it is surrounded by difficulties which are a fruitful source of error and consequently of litigation. We have amplified the provisions of the Code to meet this defect, and have introduced some forms which can be adopted to meet the requirements of individual cases. We think that further forms might be added with advantage before the Bill becomes law.

H. Amongst other matters we have removed limitations which at present exist on the power of appointing Receivers, and have conferred a power to appoint Receivers on Subordinate Courts.

5. Execution.—The subject of execution is, perhaps, one of the most difficult with which we have had to deal. The present system, in the mofussil at any rate, tends to excessive delay and affords facilities for defeating the claims of creditors. At the same time the creditor often has only himself to blame, owing to his own laches in prosecuting his rights. In the Presidency Town the same objections cannot be fairly raised; the system works well; whilst, in the mofussil, the difficulties arise not so much from the machinery itself, as from the defective manner in which it is worked. One of the most fruitful sources of litigation is the setting aside of execution sales, on the ground of irregularity in the publication of the sale proclamation. It is notorious that in many of these cases the Court's officer either through negligence or dishonesty has not duly published the proclamation, but it is impossible to deal with such cases by any provision in a Code. After a most careful consideration of the subject, we have not seen our way to any very drastic changes in the present system. We have found ourselves unable to accept the somewhat far-reaching proposal of the Committee of 1902 in relation to the execution of decrees by precept: but we are so far in accord with the view expressed by that Committee as to have been able to insert in the Bill a clause which enables the Court which passed the decree to issue a precept to any other Court to attach property of the judgment-debtor, pending execution in the ordinary course. Beyond this we have felt we could not safely go.

We anticipate that there will be a substantial saving of time, and consequent expense, from the provision requiring that mesne profits shall be ascertained by the Court under the decree itself, and not as now in execution proceedings.

Clause 53 has been introduced to settle a long mooted point upon which there is much diversity of judicial opinion, as to whether or not questions as to the liability of ancestral property in the hands of a son or other descendant to whom it has come otherwise than by descent for the payment of the debt for which the decree was passed, can be determined under Cl. 47 of the present Bill, corresponding with S. 244 of the existing Code. We think they should be.

Other amendments deserving notice relate to (1) the power to break open the outer door of the judgment-debtor's dwelling-house; (2) the date from which the purchaser's title accrues; (3) oral application for immediate execution; (4) the discretion of the Court in the execution of decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights; (5) the execution against partnership property; (6) extended facilities for attaching salaries; and

(7) powers to decree-holders to carry decrees into effect at the expense of the judgment-debtor.

We regard the changes made in relation to execution as calculated to materially assist the judgment-creditor in recovering the fruits of his judgment.

6. Arbitration.—Two questions of importance have arisen in connection with this subject: (1) should any of the sections of the Arbitration Act of 1899 be incorporated into the Code; (2) should the right of appeal as now existing, be altered, and if so in what direction? We are of opinion that the best course would undoubtedly be to eliminate from the Code all the clauses as to arbitration, and insert them in a new and comprehensive Arbitration Act. There are, perhaps, difficulties as to this at present. We have determined therefore to leave the Arbitration clauses much as they are in the present Code: but we have placed them in a Schedule in the hope that at no distant date they may be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act.

In regard to appeals, some change has been made. Upon this question, adopting the view of the Judicial Committee as expressed in Ghulam's case (I.L.R. 29 Cal. 167) we are strongly in favour of finality in cases of arbitration. If rights of appeal be given, the disappointed party will take advantage of every such right. To meet the difficulty expressed in the case reported in I.L.R. 25 Cal. 141 (which followed many other cases in the Calcutta High Court), we have inserted the words "or being otherwise invalid" in sub-S. (c) of S. 521 of the present Code. If, therefore, either party considers the award is invalid on any ground he can apply to have it set aside. We have thought it right to give one appeal from the opinion expressed by the Court on a special case under S. 517, and to allow one appeal as from order under Ss. 521, 523 and 526. And having regard to the rather wide language of the Judicial Committee in Ghulam's case, we have further thought it advisable to make it clear that an order granting an application either under S. 523 or 526 is not to be deemed a decree within the meaning of the Code; otherwise there would be a wider right of appeal from orders under these sections than from a decree under S. 522. The other alterations deal with the text, rather than with any question of policy or principle.

7. Suits relating to public matters.—We have inserted a clause to enable actions for public nuisances to be brought, with the consent of the Advocate-General, irrespective of special damage. It has been represented to us that such a power is needed and we concur in that view.

8. Public charities.—The suggestion has been made on high authority that some express reference should be made in the Code to the power of the Court to apply Cy-pres doctrine in the settling of schemes. But this power would appear to exist already within its proper limits (Mayor of Lyons' case, L.R. 3 I.A. 32) and we do not think it necessary to make express reference to it.

It has been represented to us by more than one gentleman whose opinion is entitled to weight, that the power to enquire into the affairs of public charities should be made more extensive. The clause, as it stands, gives sufficient powers to the Courts to direct accounts and to frame schemes when once a suit has been instituted, but it is said that members of the public interested in any public charity ought to have the means of calling for and inspecting accounts without undertaking the burden of a suit, at least in the first instance. We are told that revenues derived from charitable trusts are in some cases very large in amount: that no accounts of their expenditure are ordinarily rendered, and that there is good ground for believing that a considerable portion is misspent or squandered on useless objects.

The Hon'ble Dr. Rashbehary Ghose supports these views and has submitted a clause to give effect to them. It is in the following terms:—

"93-A (1) The Court may also, upon an application by any two or more persons having the like interest and having obtained the like consent, direct any trustee of such charity to cause to be prepared and filed in the Court, within such time as may be specified in the order, a detailed account of the receipts and disbursements in connection with the trust property for a period not exceeding three years next preceding the date of the application.

(2) Such accounts, when filed in Court, shall be open to inspection by the public.

(3) A trustee who fails to comply with any such direction shall be removed if a suit for that purpose be instituted, unless he can show good cause for such failure."

We have given to the subject our best consideration and desire to record our sympathy with the motives of the proposers. But we have not inserted the clause in the Bill because we think that the question is one of policy on which the public opinion of the communities interested should first be obtained. It affects primarily, as we understand, the Hindu and, to a less extent, the Muhammadan community. And we should not feel justified in recommending an amendment of the law on such a subject as this, unless the leaders of those communities were to express their support of the proposal in unequivocal terms. If it is eventually decided to adopt the amendment, then we think that the clause proposed by Dr. Ghose may be accepted.

9. Suits by or against firms.—Attention is directed to the new provision in regard to suits by or against firms (O. XXX), which will, we hope, prove acceptable to the commercial community.

10. New procedure.—We have given power to provide by Rules for Counterclaims, Third Party Procedure, Summary Procedure in suits for debt or liquidated demands, as, for instance, rent, or any other definite sum payable under a contract and Originating summons. We are of opinion that these forms of proceeding may usefully be adopted in some areas, but that this is a matter which should be left for each High Court to decide.

11. Appeals.—As regards appeals from original decrees we have departed but slightly from the existing Code. We have thought it advisable to give legislative sanction to the view that no appeal shall lie from a consent decree, or as to costs, except by leave of the Court: but the most important change is that incorporated in Clause 97, which renders it obligatory upon a party, who considers himself aggrieved by a preliminary decree, to appeal from that decree, at the risk of being precluded from disputing its correctness on an appeal from the final decree. We feel strongly that this is a most useful provision, as tending to that which is so desirable, viz., finality in litigation.

As regards appeals from appellate decrees the only substantial departure from the existing Code is the insertion of Clause 103. Experience has shown the desirability of this clause, the effect of which will be to avoid remands, with their consequent delay and expense.

As regards appeals from orders a comparison of Clause 104 of the Bill with S. 588 of the existing Code would support a prima facie inference that the right of appeal from orders had been materially curtailed. But this inference is dispelled on looking at subclause (h) of Clause 104 which allows an appeal from any order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules. We have gone carefully into the question of the cases in which an appeal should be allowed from these orders and our conclusion is expressed in the rules themselves.

12. Rules.—The distribution of the provisions of the Code between the body of the Bill and the rules is a matter on which opinions may well differ. The general principle on which we have proceeded has been to keep in the body of the Bill those provisions which appear to us to be fundamental and those provisions which confer powers operating outside the Province in which the Court is situated. In some cases we have adopted the plan of inserting leading provisions in the Bill, stating in general terms the powers of the Court, and of leaving, the details to rules; in matters of less importance the provisions have been relegated altogether to rules. The result of this re-arrangement is to reduce the Act, as distinct from Schedules, to 155 clauses. The existing order of sequence has, speaking generally, been maintained, but the reduced bulk of the Bill has rendered it no longer necessary to reproduce the division into Chapters.

It is proposed to vest the power of making Rules in High Courts, subject to the control of Local Governments (or, in the case of the Calcutta High Court, of the Government of India), but we think it most desirable that in exercising this power the Courts should have the advice of representatives of the various branches of the legal profession, and we have accordingly provided that, in the case of Chartered High Courts and of Chief Courts, Rules shall only be made after those Courts have taken the opinion of a Rule Committee on which there will be representatives of the Bar, of Vakeels or Pleaders and, in Presidency-towns, of Attorneys. In the case of other High Courts power has been given to establish such Rule Committees as the Governor-General in Council may determine. It is believed that Standing Committees of this kind will be of great value. We have thought it better to require the same sanction as is required by the Indian High Courts Act of 1861, in order that the rule-making power should correspond with the power conferred under that Act; but we are of opinion that, in the interest of uniformity, it is expedient that all amendments of Rules should be communicated to the Government of India and to other High Courts before sanction is given to them. This, we understand, can be effected by executive order.

If our proposal is adopted, it will probably be useful to publish annually in every Province some manual corresponding to the English "Annual Practice" containing:—

(1) the Act;

(2) all rules of procedure made under it or under other Acts in the Province;

(3) notes of decisions on the Act and Rules.

13. We are sensible that there may be defects and flaws in the Bill which we append to this Report. The subject is complicated and technical and the time at our disposal has been limited. We do not doubt therefore that much improvement may be made in the Bill before it is finally passed into law. But in our opinion it is framed on the right lines. We believe for the reasons we have stated that in any reform of Civil Procedure it is essential to introduce some elasticity; to give wider powers of control to the High Courts, and to invest them with a larger discretion in regard to the conduct of cases which come before them. Mr. Dikshit, Subordinate Judge from Bombay, has been present throughout our deliberations, and we take this opportunity of acknowledging the help we have derived from his experience of the working of the Code in the mofussil. We desire also to record our acknowledgments of the services of Mr. Law, of the Legislative Department, who has attended to the clerical and press work to our entire satisfaction.

NOTES ON CLAUSES.

A.—CLAUSES OF BILL.

Preliminary.

Clause 2.—The definitions have been re-arranged in alphabetical order.

Decree.—The importance of the definition of the word "decree" rests on the fact that by reference to it the right of appeal is determined. The Committee have in the main adhered to the existing definition; but they have modified it in two respects, and this has involved a slight recasting of the language. The principal modification aims at permitting an appeal from an adjudication which purports to settle the rights of the parties, though it does not completely dispose of the suit. Such an adjudication the Committee describe as a preliminary decree.

The explanation is intended to make it clear that a decree may be partly final and partly preliminary. Thus a decree for the recovery of possession of immovable property and for mesne profits would be of this mixed character.

The word "within" has been substituted for "mentioned or referred to in" with a view to bringing within the definition of decree orders against sureties (see Cl. 142) and orders as to Court-fees in pauper suits (see O. XXXIII, R. 13) and thus providing for appeals therefrom.

The only other modification is for the purpose of excluding a right of appeal from an order of dismissal for default.

Legal representative.—We have inserted a definition of "legal representative"—an expression which has been variously interpreted by the High Courts as would appear from the reported cases which are not easily reconcilable with one another. See 8 C. W. N. 843, in which almost all the earlier cases are reviewed.

The Committee trust that the definition which has been added by them will set at rest what owing to the absence of any such definition from the present Code is a somewhat debatable point.

Mesne profits.—The Committee have altered the definition of "mesne profits" so as to exclude from the calculation any increased rents and profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession for which he cannot at present claim compensation from the rightful owner either by way of mitigation of damages or otherwise.

Clause 4.—The clause as drafted will, it is believed, effect all the savings covered by S. 4 of the Code. The concluding paragraph of that section is believed to be obsolete and has accordingly not been reproduced. On this point the opinions of Local Governments are invited.

Clause 6.—In view of the extended scope of Cl. 4 the reproduction of Ss. 6 and 7 (except as to the final paragraph of S. 6) does not appear to be necessary.

The words "or proceedings in suits" have been introduced in this clause to negative the view that a Court to which a decree is sent for execution has jurisdiction to execute the decree though the amount exceeds the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, a point on which there is a conflict of opinion. (I. L. R. 17 Mad. 309; I. L. R. 16 Cal. 465, 457.)

Clause 7.—The provisions as to Provincial Small Cause Courts have been rearranged in what is hoped is a more convenient form.

PART I.—SUITS IN GENERAL.

The provisions contained in S. 10 of the Code were first enacted by Act XI of 1836 and were reproduced in the Code of 1859 and in subsequent Codes. In the opinion of the Committee their retention is no longer necessary and they have been omitted.

Clause 11.—Res judicata.—It is not possible to make a complete exposition of a subject so complex as that of res judicata within the limits of a section of an Act and the Committee think it better to re-enact S. 13 as it stands in the Code with such modifications only as experience has shown to be necessary.

The Committee recognize that a proceeding does not come within the language of that section; but they think it better not to deal with this point in express terms for the reason that the applicability of the doctrine of res judicata to certain proceedings is not open to doubt, and they foresee that any express reference to proceedings in a crystallised definition might only lead to difficulties (L. R. 11 I. A. 37 and I. L. R. 29 Cal. 707).

The word "another" has been substituted for "former" as being more in conformity with Indian decisions.

Explanation I is new and is intended to affirm the view that the competence of the jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from its decision.

Explanation VI.—The inclusion of public rights is to give due effect to suits relating to public nuisance (Cl. 91).

Clause 12.—This clause is new and is necessitated by the transfer of certain of the provisions of the existing Code to Rules.

Clause 13.—The provisions as to foreign judgment have been re-arranged and as it is hoped stated more clearly.

Section 14.—The last paragraph has been omitted. It appears to the Committee that it is not possible to maintain this distinction in the case of all Asiatic Courts. The Courts of Japan for instance are entitled to be treated on the same footing as European Courts. They know of no satisfactory distinction which could be drawn so as to give effect to the intention of the existing provisions; and they recommend that the paragraph should be omitted and that Courts should rely on the powers given by Cl. 13.

Place of suing.—The provisions under this heading have been collected and re-arranged.

Clause 16 (a).—The insertion of the words "with or without rent or profits" is intended to remove any difficulty there may be where the defendant does not reside within the local limits of the Court within whose jurisdiction the property is situate.

Clause 18.—The Committee have added words to this clause in order still further to restrict the taking of technical objections as to jurisdiction.

Clause 20.—The Committee have omitted Explanation III of S. 17, which has become unnecessary owing to the addition made to sub-Cl. (c) of the words "wholly or in part" in reference to the cause of action.

Clause 24.—The words "at any stage" have been added to remove the difficulty created by the view that a suit cannot be transferred after the hearing has once commenced, as to which there is a conflict of decision.

Clauses 26-35.—The provisions in Chapter III to XVIII of the present Code have been in the main relegated to rules, but such general provisions as are believed to be essential have been preserved in Cls. 26 to 35.

Clause 32.—The Committee have omitted the last paragraph of S. 136 of the Code as they think unnecessary to impose penal consequences for a default of the class indicated.

PART II.—EXECUTION.

Clauses 36-74.—The bulk of the provisions as to execution will be found in the Rules, but the main provisions as to the Courts by which decrees may be executed, the questions to be determined by Courts executing decrees the limit of time for execution, transferees and legal representatives, procedure in execution, arrest and attachment, the relegation to Collectors of power to execute certain decrees, the distribution of assets and resistance to execution have been retained in the body of the Bill.

Clause 46—Precept.—Though a system of execution based on precepts is in the opinion of the Committee open to grave objection, they think the idea may be utilized for the purpose of enabling a decree-holder to obtain an interim attachment where there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree. They have for this purpose introduced Cl. 46 into the Bill. They think it expedient to fix a time limit for the continuance of this interim attachment, but at the same time they have empowered the Court to extend the period to meet the exigencies of particular cases.

After careful consideration they have come to the conclusion that notwithstanding attachment under a precept, re-attachment on the ordinary application for execution will still be necessary. Though at first sight it may appear a better course to provide that re-attachment shall not be necessary when the issue of a precept is followed by the ordinary application for execution, after careful consideration they have come to the conclusion that it will be safer to require re-attachment, having regarded to the agency by which execution is carried into effect.

Clause 47.—The Committee have omitted sub-Cls. (a) and (b) of S. 244 of the existing Code because they are strongly of opinion that questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits or interest should be determined by the decree and not in execution. If this view is accepted it will be possible to exercise an effective control over the action taken by Subordinate Courts in dealing with such matters.

The Committee have redrafted sub-Cl. (3) and made it compulsory on the Court to determine questions arising as to representatives of parties. In their opinion it is inexpedient that separate suits should be instituted for the decision of such questions. The delay and expense involved are often very great and result in the needless protraction of litigation.

The explanation is intended to put an end to a conflict of judicial decision.

Section 257-A.—The Committee think that S. 257-A may be omitted with advantage. It was first enacted by Act XII of 1879 with a view to protect the interests of judgment-debtors against the exercise of undue pressure by decree-holders. The section has given rise to conflicting decisions, and as interpreted by the majority of the High Courts is found in practice to be of little service to judgment-debtors. Moreover, S. 16 of the Indian Contract Act as amended appears to the Committee to afford adequate protection where it is required.

Clause 51.—This clause states generally the powers of the Court in regard to execution leaving the details to be determined by rules. It will be observed that the power to direct immediate execution is no longer restricted to one class of suits but that it is now general in terms. Any limitation that may be found necessary will be imposed by rules.

Clause 53.—Has been added by the Committee in order to set at rest a question on which the High Courts are divided in opinion. It is true that where a son or grandson takes any ancestral property by survivorship he is bound to pay out of such property all debts of his ancestor not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes; but whether the creditor can follow the property in the hand of the son or grandson in execution is a debatable point under the Code. The question is merely one of procedure, and the Committee have come to the conclusion that any controversy between the parties with regard to the liability of the son or grandson to pay the debts of his ancestor should be determined in execution, it being open to them to raise any objection or defence in such proceedings which they might have raised in a separate suit instituted by the creditor, the clause in question not imposing upon them a greater liability than that imposed by the Hindu law.

Clause 55 (1), second proviso.—The object of this proviso is to prevent vexatious forms of resistance to execution which constantly obstruct decree-holders in the execution of their decrees.

Clause 55 (2).—The sub-clause is intended to cover the case of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might, as in the case of railway servants, be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public.

Clause 61.—The Committee have reproduced this Clause from the former Bill (Cl. 269-B) in accordance with what they understand to be the wishes of the Government. But the conditions should in their opinion be so modified as to relieve the Courts from fixing the portion to be released from attachment.

To impose this duty on the Courts would materially increase their work in a matter in regard to which they are not in a position to form the best opinion and would probably result in an undesirable lack of uniformity.

Clause 62.—The Committee have inserted a new provision to authorize the breaking open of the outer door of a judgment-debtor's house. They do not think that it would be safe to extend the operation of this provision to the house of a stranger.

Section 288.—This section of the present Code first appears in the Code of 1877. It was not suggested by any decided case and the only explanation offered by the Select Committee, by whom it was introduced, is as follows:—

"We think that the proclamation of execution sales should state the incumbrances (if any) to which the interest about to be sold is liable, and we have provided that no Judge, etc., shall be answerable for error in the proclamation, unless it has been committed dishonestly."

The Committee are of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of Act XVIII of 1850, the section may safely be omitted.

Clause 64.—An explanation has been added to make it clear that claims within the protection of this clause include claims for rateable distribution of assets.

Clause 69.—The provisions as to Collectors have been placed in a separate schedule. They deal with a special matter and are not of general application.

Clause 73.—The Committee have slightly altered the wording of this clause in order to bring it into line with the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, S. 96.

PART III.—INCIDENTAL PROCEEDINGS.

The general powers of Courts in regard to commissions have been summarised in Cl. 75 and the detailed provision will be found in the First Schedule.

PART IV.—SUITS IN PARTICULAR CASES.

The bulk of the corresponding part of the present Code will be found in the rules. The provisions as to suits by aliens, etc., have been retained in the Bill and a few only of the provisions relating to suits by or against the Government. There is a general clause defining the nature of interpleader suits.

Clause 81.—The Committee think that the same measure of protection should be afforded to the defendant where Government undertakes the defence as where the Government makes no application for the purpose, and it appears to the Committee that the proper protection should be that the defendant should be exempt from mesne arrest and his property from mesne attachment. They therefore propose to strike out the proviso from Cl. 269 and to alter sub-Cl. (a) of Cl. 270 so as to give effect to this.

Clause 86 (2).—The Committee have inserted words in this sub-clause to make it clear that the decision of the Government is final and not open to question by the Court. A doubt had been raised on the point.

PART V.—SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Arbitration and suits relating to pubic matters have been discussed in the former part of this Report.

Clause 92 (Public Charities).—As a doubt has been expressed in at least one reported decision whether S. 539 is or is not mandatory, the Committee have thought it desirable, in order to settle this question, to introduce sub-Cl. (2).

PART VI.—SUPPLEMENTAL PROCEEDINGS.

Here again a leading provision has been retained in the Bill, and the details of procedure have been relegated to rules.

PART VII.—APPEALS.

Clause 97.—The Committee have inserted an express provision to compel litigants to appeal from preliminary decrees, and have estopped them, on their failure to do so, from raising objections to such decrees in appeals from final decrees. On this point they accept the unanimous opinion of the Calcutta High Court. They think it unreasonable that parties should allow proceedings to be carried on to their final stage and large costs to be incurred if they intend to rely upon objections which could be taken at an earlier stage.

Clause 99.—The Committee have extended this clause in order to give the Courts a larger discretion in dealing with irregularities in proceedings, and they have inserted express words to meet the point decided in I.L.R. 26 Bom 259 and I.L.R. 27 Mad 80 and in a recent decision of the Calcutta High Court.

Clause 100.—The Committee have struck out the word "specified" in the expression "specified law or usage," as being in their opinion redundant.

Clause 105.—Though the remarks of the Privy Council in Moheshur Singh v. The Bengal Government (7 Moo. I.A. 283) are wide enough to embrace an appeal from an order of remand, the Committee think those orders were probably not in their Lordships' contemplation when they condemned the view that a failure to appeal from an interlocutory order should deprive the person aggrieved of his right to object to such order when subsequently appealing from the decree. And the Committee think there are good reasons on the score of delay and expense for treating an appeal from an order of remand as a special case and precluding an appellant from taking, on an appeal from decree, any objection that might have been urged by way of appeal from an order of remand.

The Committee have deleted the word "such" to remove a difficulty it creates (10 Moo I.A. 340, 413; 12 Moo. I.A. 157.

PART VIII.—REFERENCE, REVIEW AND REVISION.

These provisions are not substantially altered. They are summarised in this Part and the details are in rules.

PART IX.—CHARTERED HIGH COURTS.

Is not materially altered.

PART X.—RULES.

See observations in the former Part of this Report.

PART XI.—MISCELLANEOUS.

The Committee have omitted S. 646 as they see no reason specially to differentiate the case of a Registrar, and it is believed that in practice no use is made of the section.

Clause 137.—The Committee have inserted the words "or other person" after the word "officer" in sub-Cl. (b) in order to give the High Court power to relieve the officers of the Courts of the work of administering affidavits in cases in which it may be necessary to do so It has been represented to them by the Calcutta High Court that this relief is much required.

Clause 140.—The terms of S. 583 of the Code do not justify the practice founded on it, and the Committee have therefore recast the section so as to bring it into closer conformity with that practice.

Clauses 145 and 148 to 150 are new. They are intended to enlarge the discretion of Courts.

B.—RULES.

The Committee think that the division of the rules into orders will be found convenient for the purposes of citation and reference.

Under Cl. 35 the Court has full power to apportion costs. The Committee understand that in practice the provision of S. 26 is not operative in the mufassil, and that part of the section which related to costs has not therefore been reproduced.

O. I, R. 3 (S. 28).—The Committee realize that the words "in respect of the same matter" in R. 3 have given rise to great difficulty, and they think it advisable to follow the wording of the English rule and to omit them.

O. I, Rr. 5 and 7.—The Committee thought that it was desirable to add O. XVI, Rr. 5 and 7, of the English rules.

O. III, R. 2 (S. 37).—The provisions of existing Codes which are represented by this clause are in somewhat different terms and are limited to persons holding general powers-of-attorney within certain local limits. The Committee think it unnecessary to preserve these limitations and have made the sub-clause general. It follows that the present Cl. 37 (b) becomes unnecessary. It is included in sub-Cl. (a).

The last paragraph of S. 37 has been omitted as no longer necessary.

O. III, R. 4 (S. 39).—The Committee are uncertain whether it is necessary to make a reference to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sindh. The point is one for the Government of Bombay.

They also suggest in the alternative that the privilege now enjoyed by all advocates enrolled in Chartered High Courts shall be extended to those Advocates enrolled in non-Chartered High Courts who are members of the English or Irish bar or of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland.

O. IV.—Institution of suits.—The greater part of the existing provision on this subject will be found in the order on pleadings.

O. VI.—The Committee have added a few rules relating to pleadings based upon the system of pleading introduced by the Judicature Acts in England which is generally admitted to be the best form of pleading in civil suits. In this country outside the Presidency town the pleadings are seldom artistically drawn. They are neither concise nor precise but contain vague and general statements from which it is difficult to ascertain definitely the real question in controversy between the parties. The sole object of pleadings is thus frequently defeated, the issue is enlarged, the trial is delayed and much unnecessary expense is incurred by the parties who are also liable to be taken by surprise. They have further provided that the forms in the Schedule shall when applicable be used for all pleadings, and when they are not applicable, forms of the like character shall be used. The rules prescribed by us will not prevent the pleader from exercising his discretion; for the amount of detail must necessarily vary with the nature of each suit. It is however made clear that there must be particularity sufficient to appraise the Court and the other party of the exact nature of the questions to be tried.

The Committee have also given a party who considers that his opponent's pleading does not give him the information to which he is entitled, the right to apply for further particulars so as to enable him to know what case he has to meet at the trial.

They have, however, endeavoured to modify the rigour of the rules by providing in accordance with S. 55 of the Indian Evidence Act that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies upon it.

O. IX.—S. 104 originally formed part of S. 60 of Act, VIII of 1809, and in combination with the rest of that section it was appropriate. As a separate section, however, it is misleading, and it certainly is not now required in view of the provisions for service on a defendant residing out of British India and for proceeding with a suit ex parte when a defendant does not appear. Its retention would involve a diversity of procedure which the Committee think undesirable (See I.L.R. 23 All. 99).

O. IX, R. 13.—The Committee have inserted words to make it clear that a decree can only be set aside in favour of a defendant against whom the decree has been passed ex parte. There is some conflict of judicial authority upon this point, and the Committee think that the matter should be set at rest in this sense.

O. XI—Interrogatories.—The provisions in the Code as to discovery are based on the rules of English procedure in force at the time when it was passed. Since then the English procedure has been amended and is now contained in O. XXXI. This order has in effect been adopted in the rules regulating the procedure on the original side of the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay and has it is believed, been found to work satisfactorily in practice.

On the other hand, in Mufassil Courts little use has yet been made of the machinery of discovery, and the Committee therefore think the rules of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts on their original sides may be safely adopted without risk of disturbing a procedure with which the Mufassil Courts have become familiarized.

This will secure uniformity of practice and also the advantage of the commentary on the rules prescribed by the English decisions.

O. XIII.—Admissions.—The Committee think the practice of admissions may with advantage be extended to facts as well as to documents.

The procedure is not compulsory, but its adoption would result in cheapening and expediting litigation, and it is hoped that its use will be encouraged by the Courts.

O. XIV, R. 6 (S. 150).—There does not seem to be any real conflict as to whether an appeal lies, though at first sight it might appear otherwise. It has therefore been considered unnecessary to provide expressly for an appeal.

O. XX, R. 11 (S. 210).—The Committee have added words to sub-R. (1) of this rule in order to override the ruling of the Bombay High Court in the case of Raghu Govind Paranjpe v. Dipchand (I.L.R. 4 Bom. 96), as the practice inculcated by that ruling seems to prevail only in the Presidency of Bombay and not in the rest of India.

O. XX, R. 14 (S. 214).—These amendments are based on the rulings contained in the decisions of the High Court of Allahabad at I.L.R. 6 All. 370, 455, and I.L.R. 11 All. 164.

Having regard to the opinion expressed in I.L.R. 24 Mad at page 463, we have thought it right to make it clear that title vests without an instrument of transfer. To require a transfer now might throw a cloud over numberless titles which rest on the assumption sanctioned by long practice that no instrument of transfer was necessary.

O. XX, R. 18 (S. 216).—The Committee have introduced an amendment to give effect to the view that appeals from decrees relating to set-off should lie to the Courts to which appeals in respect of the original claim would lie.

O. XXI, R. 2.—The Committee have omitted certain words from the last paragraph of S. 258 of the Code in order to make it clear that the Court cannot recognize a payment or adjustment which has not been certified for any purpose whatsoever. It follows that an uncertified payment or adjustment cannot operate to prolong the period of limitation for applying for execution under the Limitation Act.

O. XXI, R. 3.—The Committee have inserted this rule to provide for cases, which they are told are not uncommon, of an estate being situated within the jurisdiction of two or more Courts. There are decisions on this point, but they are not harmonious, and the Committee think it well to determine the law definitely.

O. XXI, 11 (S. 256).—The Committee have omitted the limitation imposed under existing Code on oral applications for immediate execution. They see no reason why this limitation should be preserved.

O. XXI, R. 11 (e).—The Committee have not given effect to the suggestion that this should be limited to payments and adjustments which the creditor executing the decree is bound by law to recognize, as this would remove a valuable incentive to state truly what payments have been made (see I. L. R. 20 Bom. 288).

O. XXI, R. 20.—The Committee have omitted the words "or his or their representatives". This will be covered by the general clause.

O. XXI, R. 23 (4) explanation and illustration (d), (S. 246).—This addendum has been introduced in accordance with the views of the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts as expressed in the cases of Hury Doyal Guho v. Din Doyal Guho, (I. L. R. 9 Cal. 479) and Ram Sukh Dass v. Tota Ram (I. L. R. 14 All. 339).

O. XXI, R. 26 (S. 248).—The Committee have omitted the reference to a decree passed on appeal, for that is ordinarily the decree to be executed [Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Rajah Burrodacaunt Roy (14 Moo. I. A. 465) and Muhammad Salaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan, (I. L. R. 11 All. 267)].

O. XXI, R. 32 (S. 260).—The Committee have omitted in this rule all reference to a decree for the recovery of a wife, for there can be no such decree under the law, as a wife cannot be treated as a chattel to be delivered over to the husband. Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband, the latter may obtain an injunction against him which may be enforced in case of disobedience either by the imprisonment of the defendant, or by the attachment of his property, or by both.

O. XXI, R. 34.—Section 261 has been recast so as to bring it into conformity with the chronological order of events, and a provision has been added to meet the requirements of the Indian Registration Act.

O. XXI, Rr. 44 and 45.—These provisions were inserted in Bill No. II with the approval of the Government of India, and the Committee have therefore reproduced them in the present edition of the Bill.

O. XXI, R. 56.—The purpose of this rule is to put an end to doubts which from time to time have arisen as to the continuance of an attachment by reason of the practice of "striking off proceedings" or "removing proceedings from the file" for which there is no justification in the Code.

O. XXI, R. 57 (S. 278).—Though the execution of mortgage decree is expressly incorporated in the Code, the Committee still think that claims and objections arising out of the execution of such decrees should not be the subject of summary procedure under this and the following rules but should be determined in the ordinary course.

This does not imply that the procedure under the latter rules as to resistance to possession or dispossession does not apply.

O. XXI, R. 76.—In Rr. 76 and 83 express reference has been made to a re-sale so as to make it clear that the default mentioned in those rules will attract the consequence indicated in R. 70. In this connection reference may be made to I. L. R. 7 Cal. 337.

O. XXI, R. 85.—The Committee have altered this rule in order to prevent its being obligatory on the Court to forfeit the deposit in every case. The rule as it stands at present has caused hardship in certain circumstances, vide the case of Sambasiva Ayyar v. Vydinada Sami (I. L. R. 25 Mad. 535).

O. XXI, R. 88 (S. 310-A).—Words have been added so to make it clear that a purchaser acquiring a title before the sale in execution can claim the benefit of the rule. In other respects the Committee consider it advisable to adhere to the wording of the section.

The proposal that the sale should be set aside on payment of the purchase-money instead of the amount specified in the proclamation is, in their opinion, fraught with danger: it would be obviously useless unless subsequent protection were given to the property, and such protection might lead to collusion, which would be most prejudicial to the decree-holder.

O. XXI, R. 89.—The Committee have struck out the provisions as to irregularity in attaching the property, as such irregularity obviously cannot affect the price.

They have introduced the words "rateable distribution of assets" to clear up a doubt which has been the subject of discussion in several cases.

They have altered the language of the proviso in order to meet the doubts which have been raised as to the evidence upon which the Court can act [Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahamad Husain (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 66)].

O. XXI, R. 91.—The Committee think it proper to retain the provisions of the Code, which make it necessary for the Court to confirm the sale in each case.

O XXI, R. 92 (S. 315).—The Committee have added words at the commencement of the clause in substitution of the last paragraph of the section which thus becomes unnecessary.

O. XXI, R. 95 (S. 316).—The Committee have preserved the limitation of three years from the date of the certificate as suggested by the Select Committee in Bill No. II. This clears up a doubt as to the time from which limitation begins to run, which has been discussed on more than one occasion.

O. XXII, R. 1.—The Select Committee struck out two of the four illustrations to S. 361 and the Committee think the remaining illustrations may also be deleted as they are too obvious to serve any useful purpose.

O. XXII, R. 3.—The Committee have introduced words in order to conform to the language of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, as amended.

O. XXII, R. 5 (S. 366).—Though or is the word used in the Code of 1882 and the Code of 1877, in the Bill of 1877 the word and is used, and it appears to the Committee clear that and is required by the context. If and is not used, then the contrast with the preceding section is lost.

The explanation can be omitted having regard to the definition of "legal representative" inserted by the Committee.

O. XXIII, R. 3.—The Committee have considered it expedient to alter the language of S. 375 so as to recognize the power of a Court to enquire into and to record a disputed compromise.

O. XXV, R. 1 (3) (S. 380).—The Committee have deleted the last words of this sub-rule, because the nature of the suit excludes the possibility of the property in suit being immovable.

O. XXIX, R. 2.—The Committee have enlarged the language of the Code so as to allow of service by post on corporations having a registered office, and by these means the rule is brought into line with the provisions of the Indian Companies Act. Companies authorized to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or of a trustee must be very few, if, indeed, any exist, and they do not appear to the Committee to call for special treatment.

O. XXX, R. 1.—The Committee have adopted with the necessary alterations the English procedure in relation to suits against firms. This new procedure has been in force for some time in the Presidency-towns of Calcutta and Bombay and has worked satisfactorily.

It is hoped that its general application will be found useful by the mercantile community, for the rules remove technical obstacles which under the present procedure may seriously impede this class of litigation, as where a partner has died.

O. XXXII, R. 3 (4).—This is based on S. 443. The Committee think it necessary to ensure that notice should reach one interested in the minor's welfare, and this rule aims at securing this result. The form of application and of notice in conformity with this sub-rule will be inserted in the schedule of forms.

O. XXXII, R. 9.—The Committee think it expedient that where a guardian insists on his right to be appointed next friend in the place of another there should be power to require him to become liable or give security for costs in the suit previously incurred.

O. XXXII, R. 15.—The Committee have extended this rule so as to cover the case of a person incapacitated from protecting his interests by reason of his mental weakness or of his being a deaf mute.

O. XXXIII, R. 1 (S. 401).—The Committee have not preserved S. 402. In the light of the case-law it is misleading, so far as it suggests that a suit will lie for loss of caste or abusive language, and they can see no sufficient reason for withholding from a pauper a right to sue as such in respect of defamation or assault.

O. XXXIV, R. 1.—The proviso to S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, has given rise to certain doubts which the Committee have sought to remove by substituting for it the words now added with a view to making it clear that a person not a party is not bound by a decree [Ram Nath Rai v. Lachman Ram (L.R. 2 I.A. 193)].

The explanation has been inserted in order to remove doubts which have arisen from the conflict of authorities on the point.

O. XXXIV, R. 2 (b).—The Committee have inserted the words "if necessary" before "retransfer" as according to mufassil practice a retransfer is not ordinarily required and they think this practice should not be altered.

O. XXXIV, R. 3.—The Committee have omitted the provision as to the defendant paying money to the plaintiff. They think it better that in every case he should pay it into Court.

O. XXXIV, R. 9.—This rule is new. It is a recognition of existing practice and remedies an obvious omission in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

O. XXXIV, R. 11.—The Committee have inserted this rule in compliance with the suggestion of the Privy Council in Gopi Narain Khanna v. Bansidhar (L.R. 32 I.A. 123). This clause was in the Transfer of Property Bill, but was omitted by the Select Committee on that Bill on the ground that it ought to find a place in the Civil Procedure Code.

O. XXXV, R. 3.—The Committee think that the institution of the interpleader suit affords a sufficient reason for the stay of other litigation in reference to the same subject-matter and they have modified S. 476 so as to give effect to this view.

O. XXXVII, R. 1.—As Chapter XXXIX of the Code is transferred into rules, the Committee have not reproduced paragraph (c) of S. 538 as its appropriate place will be in rules under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882.

O. XXXVII, R. 2.—The explanation to S. 532 was inserted to negative the effect of the decision in I.L.R. 1 Cal. 130, but its meaning, as it stands, is obscure. The Committee have therefore deleted the explanation, and added words in the body of the rule which will remove the doubts at which the explanation was aimed.

O. XXXVIII, R. 6 (S. 483).—The Committee have omitted the words "property within the jurisdiction of the Court," as they have caused a conflict of decision: and they think, as a matter of policy, there should not be the restriction these words suggest.

O. XXXVIII, R. 13.—This rule represents the views of the Government of India as expressed in the former Bill.

O. XXXIX, R. 6.—Words have been added to section 498 so as to empower the Court to order a sale of securities where that state of the market requires such a course.

O. XL.—Having regard to their standard of efficiency, the Committee see no reason to withhold from Subordinate Judges the power to appoint Receivers. They therefore propose that S. 505 of the Code should no longer be retained, for its effect in practice is often to defeat the purpose for which an application is made.

O. XLI.—S. 554 of the Code has been omitted as unnecessary.

O. XLI, R. 5 (S. 545).—The Committee have added words to S. 545 in order to make it clear that proceedings under a decree as well as execution can be stayed by an Appellate Court; the recognition of preliminary decrees makes it the more necessary to have an express power to this effect instead of resting on an inherent power [Balkishen Sahu v. Khugnu, (I.L.R. 31 Cal. 722)]. The Committee have introduced express words authorizing an ex parte stay, as the need for such an order constantly arises in practice.

O. XLI, R. 6 (S. 546).—The Committee have modified this rule in order to make it clear that security may be required though the property has previously been taken in execution [See Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh, (I.L.R. 33 Cal. 927)].

O. XLI, R. 7.—The Committee have added this clause to meet particularly the case where the litigant does not quarrel with the decree but appeals from an order passed in execution of that decree (I.L.R. 28 Cal. 734).

O. XLI, R. 23.—After due consideration the Committee have thought it safer not to give legislation sanction to the views enunciated in Habib Bakhsh v. Baldeo Prasad, (I.L.R. 23 All. 167). The power of reversal and remand is liable to be abused, while the procedure under S. 566 is free from this liability and at the same time furnishes an effectual remedy.

The words at the end of the rule have been added to clear up a doubt which is stated by the Select Committee to exist as to whether evidence recorded at the original trial can be used on the trial after remand.

O. XLI, R. 34.—The Committee consider it most important that an Appellate Court should have the fullest power to do complete justice between the parties.

The illustration indicates a type of case for which provision is intended to be made.

O. XLII, R. 1 (l).—The extension of time for the payment of mortgage-money is obviously of much greater moment to the mortgagor than to the mortgagee. Therefore the Committee have provided for an appeal from an order refusing, but not from an order granting an extension of time.

O. XLIII, R. 1 (S. 592).—Words have been added to avoid the conclusion at which the Madras High Court has recently arrived (I.L.R. 26 Mad. 369).

O. XLV, R. 1.—The words "or the construction of a document, which construction may affect the merits," have been omitted, as they appear to be sufficiently covered by the power to refer any question of law.

NOTES ON SCHEDULES

SCHEDULE IV.

The Committee have amended S. 22 of the Limitation Act to supply an omission which has been noticed by the High Courts namely; the absence of any provision with regard to a devolution of interest pendente lite where it takes place otherwise than by reason of death. The section as amended will include not only cases in which a devolution of interest takes place pendente lite owing to death, but also to other cases in which such devolution occurs.

The Code [S. 312] contemplates the confirmation of a sale of immovable property immediately on the expiration of the thirty days allowed by Art. 166 of the Limitation Schedule. But the period allowed for an application to set aside a sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest therein is sixty days [Art. 172]. The result is that in some Provinces the confirmation of a sale is delayed for sixty days; whilst, in other Provinces, sales which have been already confirmed are liable to be set aside. The Committee think that in the matter of limitation an application under S. 313 should be brought into line with an application under S. 311 and they therefore propose to repeal Article 172 and to amend Article 166 so as to include applications under S. 313.

The Hon'ble Mr. ERLE RICHARDS.

The Hon'ble Mr. ERLE RICHARDS:—"My Lord, I have the honour to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature and annexed to it a copy of the Bill in which the amendments suggested by the Committee are shown in italicised type.

"It will be seen from these papers that the Committee recommend no alterations of a radical kind in the Bill as settled by the Committee which sat at Simla during the past summer. There are a number of amendments of detail suggested which taken together effect a substantial improvement; but the main lines of the Bill have been accepted.

"The principal feature of novelty in the Bill as introduced is the re-arrangement of the clauses and the relegation of minor provisions to a schedule which can be amended or added to by High Courts subject to the advice of Rule Committees. The proposal has met with general acceptance. Local Governments and High Courts are at one in thinking that it will effect a valuable improvement in the machinery of our civil procedure, and the Committee agree with them.

"Two amendments have been introduced in that part of the Bill which deals with the rule-making power. The first is the insertion of a proviso that rules before being made are to be published, with the result that under S. 23 of the General Clauses Act there will be an opportunity for the public to criticise any proposals before they become law. This suggestion was put forward by the British Indian Association and the Committee think that it is one of value. The second change is in the composition of the Rule Committees. It has been pointed out that the Rule Committees ought to have among their members some gentlemen in touch with mofussil practice. The Bill as introduced provided that one of the Judges on the Committee should have had mufassal Experience but the Committee think that this in itself is hardly sufficient. They suggest therefore that there should be a Subordinate Judge on each Rule Committee and that there should be power also to appoint a Vakil or pleader practising in the mufassal. They further recommend that the Bill should not come into operation at once on passing but that there should be an interval allowed in order that the public and profession may make themselves acquainted with the new arrangement.

The amendments of the other provisions of the Bill do not call for any special mention on the present occasion. Many of them are in the nature of corrections or improvements of drafting. Since the Bill was introduced in this Council it has been once more examined and revised by some of our Colleagues and the criticisms on it have been carefully considered and digested in the Legislative Department. In that way the work of the Committee has been much lessened. This is the fourth Committee which has now deliberated on civil procedure, and it is safe to say that there is no conceivable point which has not been fully discussed during those deliberations. I would point out, my Lord, that the present Committee, like the Simla Committee are unanimous in their approval of this Bill.''

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

We, the undersigned Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature was referred, have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the appendix, and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto.

2. The chief feature of novelty in the Bill is the re-arrangement of the clauses and the relegation of minor provisions to a schedule which may be altered by High Courts. We find from the papers before us that this scheme has met with the approval of every Local Government and of all the High Courts in India. In our opinion it will give a much needed elasticity to our Judicial procedure and will enable minor defects to be remedied as they arise without resort to the Legislature, and we recommend it to the Council. We have introduced two changes into Part X of the Bill relating to the rule-making powers. In the first place we have provided that rules must be published before they are made; the result will be that S. 23 of the General Clauses Act will apply and that there will be an opportunity for the public to offer criticisms on any proposals for alterations of procedure, before those proposals are finally passed into law. We have also made a change in the composition of the Rule Committees. It has been suggested by more than one authority that the interests of the Mofussil were not sufficiently represented on those Committees as constituted under the Bill. We recognise the force of this criticism and have accordingly provided that there shall be a Subordinate Judge on each Rule Committee and that the Vakil or Pleader on the Committee shall be enrolled, but need not be practising in the High Court, so that a Vakil or Pleader practising in the Mofussil will be eligible. We further recommend that the Bill shall not come into operation until the 1st January 1909, in order that the public and the profession may have an opportunity of making themselves familiar with the re-arrangement.

3. We have carefully considered the criticisms on the Bill as introduced and the changes which we recommend are summarised below. It will be observed that we do not advise any departures of importance from the conclusions of the Special Committee which met at Simla during the past summer. That Committee had before it a mass of opinions from judicial and other authorities all over India dealing with every point of civil procedure, and they arrived at their conclusions only after a careful consideration of those opinions. We should not therefore in any case have dissented from them without strong reason, but in our judgment those conclusions are right and we accept them. Since the Bill was introduced it has been again examined and revised by some of our Colleagues and the criticisms on it have been digested in the Legislative Department. By these means our deliberations have been much expedited.

CLAUSES.

Clause 2 (2).—The definition of "decree" has been generally accepted.

Clause 11.—We have restored the word "former" and have inserted explanation I on the suggestion of Sir Bhashyam Iyengar to remove a conflict of authority as to the meaning of the expression "former suit."

Explanation V has been omitted. We think it is liable to misconstruction and that the law is well established apart from the explanation.

Clause 22.—We have omitted Cl. 22 of the Bill as introduced, as in our opinion it is unnecessary. We think that sufficient provision is made for transfers under the succeeding clause.

Clause 23.—We have omitted the proviso, which compelled applications to the High Courts under this clause to be made through the District Court. This in our opinion merely duplicates applications and is undesirable.

Clause 25.—Cl. 25 of the Bill as introduced has been rendered unnecessary by the omission of Cl. 22. We have accordingly taken it out and have put in its place a new clause taking power for the Governor-General in Council to transfer cases from one High Court to another under certain circumstances. We think that the exercise of such a power may sometimes be necessary and it has been brought to our notice that the absence of any provision on the point in the existing Code has given rise to difficulty. The new clause proceeds on the analogy of S. 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

Clause 34.—The words "not being a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge" have been omitted in this clause and elsewhere in order to make it clear that a decree for the payment of money does not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge.

Clause 46.—We think that a decree-holder who has obtained an interim attachment should not be required to re-attach the property if before the determination of the attachment he applies for execution against the property, and we have altered this clause accordingly. There will now be only one attachment.

Clause 51.—We have added a power to execute a decree by appointing a receiver, on the suggestion of the Advocate-General of Madras.

Clause 54.—We have restored S. 265 of the existing Code. It has been pointed out that the provision in the Bill as introduced was opposed to the practice in some provinces under which all partitions of land paying revenue to Government are effected by the revenue-authorities.

Clause 55.—We have carefully considered the provision as to breaking open dwelling-houses and have come to the conclusion that it should be limited to dwelling-houses in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor.

Clause 57.—Sub-Cls. (2) to (6) have been relegated to Rules (O. XXI, R. 39).

Clause 59.—The remaining provisions as to the release of judgment-debtors have been brought up from the Rules and incorporated in this clause.

Clause 60 (1) (g).—We have omitted the words "military or civil", because they appear to be of no value. The word "pensioners" of itself covers every class of pensioner.

The exemption has been extended so as to cover pensions granted out of any service family pension fund notified in that behalf by the Governor-General in Council.

Clause 60 (1) (l).—This has been extended at the request of the Government of Burma.

Clause 61.—The words "be exempted from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree" have been substituted for the words "be released from attachment and shall be free from liability to sale in execution of a decree" in order to make it clear that the exemption extends to produce which has been hypothecated.

Clause 62—has been brought into line which Cl. 55 as now amended.

Clause 66 (1).—The wording has been altered on the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Aikman so as to put the meaning beyond doubt.

Clause 79 (2).—This saving was accepted by the Select Committee of 1903 and we think it desirable to have it in the Bill in order to avoid possible doubt.

Clause 92 (1).—It has been suggested to us by several authorities that Local Governments should be empowered to invest Courts subordinate to District Courts with power to try cases under this clause, and we think that this suggestion should be accepted.

The necessary words have been added.

Clause 96 (3) of the Bill as introduced has been omitted. The case-law on the subject is sufficiently clear and considerable objection has been taken to the sub-clause.

Clause 98.—The wording of the proviso has been altered; it now deals only with the decision on the point of law referred.

Clause 104.—Sub-Cl. (1) (v) has been added in order to give a right of appeal against the decision of the Court on a special case; this is in accordance with the recommendation of the Special Committee, but appears to have been omitted from the Bill by mistake.

Clause 107.—Sub-Cl. (1) is new. We think it desirable to have in the body of the Code a general provision about the powers of an Appellate Court.

Clause 134—is new. It supplies an omission.

Clauses 142 and 143—have been brought up from the Rules. We think they should be in the body of the Code.

Clause 144.—Sub-Cl. (2) has been added on the suggestion of the Calcutta High Court. We agree that restitution which may be obtained by application under this clause should not be made the subject of a separate suit.

SCHEDULE I.

Order I.

Rules 1 and 3.—The words "act or" have been added before the word "transaction".

Rule 3.—This rule has been amplified so as to bring it into line with R. 1.

Rule 5.—The words "cause of action" have been struck out.

They have given rise to considerable difficulty in England.

Rule 8.—We have, on the suggestion of the Advocate-General of Madras, added the words "or for the benefit of" after the words "on behalf of".

Order III.

Rule 4 (3).—We have adopted the alternative draft suggested by the Simla Committee in their report.

Order VI.

Rule 18.—We have substituted the words "he shall not be permitted to amend . . . . . as the case may be" for the words "such order to amend . . . . . become void".

Order VII.

Rule 17 (1).—On the suggestion of the British Indian Association the word "account" has been substituted for the word "book".

Order IX.

Rule 4.—We have struck out the provisions about limitation contained in this rule. These provisions will be incorporated in Bill to consolidate and amend the Limitation Act.

Rule 13.—We think it necessary to provide specially for cases in which it may not be possible to set aside the decree as against the applicant only.

Order XX.

Rule 18.—This rule has been altered so as to correspond with the amended Cl. 54.

Order XXI.

Rule 1 (2).—This sub-rule has been inserted on the suggestion of the British India Association.

Rule 7.—The words "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it" have been omitted. In our opinion a Court executing the decree of another Court ought not to go into any question as to the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it.

Rule 20.—This rule is new. It is inserted in order to make it clear that the provisions as to cross-decrees and cross-claims apply to the case of mortgage-decrees. The rule also makes it clear that the expressions "decree for the payment of money" and other similar expressions in the Code do not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge.

Rule 45.—We have decided to recommend the omission of this rule from the Bill. It was taken from the Bill of 1903 but met with considerable criticism and strong objection has been taken to it by the Madras Board of Revenue and the British Indian Association. In our opinion the procedure prescribed in this rule is cumbrous and there would be little or no practical advantage from it.

Rule 90.—The words "or fraud" have been added after the word "irregularity". We think that the existing law as contained in S. 311 of the present Code is defective, the omission in the section to refer to fraud as a ground for setting aside a sale having led some Courts to hold that an order on an application setting up fraud as a ground for relief is, unlike an order made on an application under S. 311, a decree and open to second appeal. This result, which often involves a considerable prolongation of these proceedings, is in our opinion undesirable. We think that applications for the setting aside of sales should so far as the procedure applicable to them is concerned, stand on the same footing whether they are based on the ground of irregularity or on the ground of fraud.

Rules 95 and 96.—We have struck out the provisions about limitations contained in these rules. We agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Miller that it would be more appropriate to incorporate them in the Limitation Act, and we have suggested their incorporation in the Bill to amend and consolidate that Act which is now before Council.

Rules 3 and 4.—Rr. 3 and 4 have been amended so as to provide that if no application for substitution is made within the time allowed by law the suit shall abate. We have struck out the provision that the Court may make an order declaring the abatement as in our opinion it is unnecessary and likely to give rise to difficulty.

Rule 6.—The provision as to antedating the judgment has been struck out and in its stead we suggest a provision to the effect that the judgment shall have the same force and effect as if it had been pronounced before the death took place. In our opinion this is all that is required.

Order XXXIV.

Some of the rules in this Order have been redrafted.

The Transfer of Property Act does not contain any provision for the passing of a final decree in cases where payment is made in accordance with the terms of the preliminary decree. This is in our opinion an omission and we have provided in Rr. 3 (1), 5 (1) and 8 (1) for the passing of final decrees in such cases.

We approve of the proposal to repeal the provisions of S. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. We think that those provisions have worked considerable hardship and are not really needed. The first part of the section enacts that a mortgagee shall not bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under S. 67 of the Act. In so far as it precludes the mortgagee from selling the mortgaged property under a judgment unconnected with the mortgage-debt it is in our opinion inexpedient; it is beyond doubt competent to a mortgagee to purchase the equity of redemption from the mortgagor by an agreement subsequent to and distinct from the mortgage-transaction, and we can see no reason why it should not be equally competent to him to have it sold in satisfaction of any claim which he may have against the mortgagor unconnected with the mortgage (Khiarajmal v. Daim, I. L. R. 32 Cal. 296; Lisel v. Reeve, 1902 A. C. 461). In so far as it precludes the mortgagee from selling the property under a judgment for the mortgage-debt it serves no useful purpose. We understand that the provision was enacted to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the debt as such and in execution selling the mortgagor's interest in the property: we, however, think that no such provision was needed seeing that under the law as it stood prior to the Act the Courts never allowed the sale of a bare equity of redemption under a judgment on the covenant (Syed Eman v. Rajcoomar, 23 W. R. 187; Khiara Jamal v. Daim, I. L. R. 32 Cal. 296).

Order XL.

Rule 4.—We have redrafted this rule on the lines of S. 18 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. We think that the power to imprison receivers is too wide and should be omitted.

Order XLI.

Rule 24.—We have struck out this rule as in our opinion it is unduly restrictive.

Order XLIII.

Rule 1.—We suggest that there should be appeals from orders pronouncing judgment against a party under Order VIII, Rule 10, Order X, Rule 4 and Order XVI, R. 20.

These orders are under the present law appealable as decrees, but having regard to the definition of a decree in the Code they would no longer be appealable in that way, and we think it necessary to make them appealable as orders. We have also given an appeal against an order made under Rule 21 of Order XI.

Appendices.—The forms have been amplified and, where necessary, redrafted. We think that, as now settled, they are an improvement on the forms in the present Code.
